Will historic day for the crossing deliver dream?

WITH the exception of the view as you come over the bridge from Essex back into Kent - a pleasant vista of winding river, the industry alongside it and, either side, the county stretching to your left and London's Docklands to the right - using the Dartford Crossing is far from a pleasant experience.

It is almost always busy, having to scrape together £2 in cash (or £2.50 as it was rather sneakily raised to this morning), is a pain, and driving through that tunnel is never any fun (although it is luxurious in comparison to the 'breathe in' approach required when driving through the hell-hole that is the Blackwall Tunnel).

But as of today, we are promised, things are going to improve. Granted, the views aren't going to change, but the queues leading up to it should.

And much will

ride on this promise being delivered - in part at least.

Because, of course, we funded the Dartford Crossing with the promise that once the motorist had finished paying for it, we'd get to use it for free.

That moment came, and that moment went. And we're still paying for it every time we use it. Only now we get someone from the Highways Agency digitally dipping their hand into our bank accounts and extracting for us.

We have been sold down the river once on this, the thought of free-flowing tolls delivering some magically clear crossing for very long seems something of a long-shot too.

But let us keep our fingers crossed. Let us hope it does work and does suddenly make getting to and from Essex a less stressful experience.

Miracles do sometimes occur.

Have a great weekend.

Barnes faces claim she 'obstructed' police probe

By Jamie Weir

jamie.weir@archant.co.uk

CONTROVERSIAL Kent Police & Crime Commissioner Ann Barnes is facing claims she "may have committed a criminal offence" following a car crash in Dartford in September.

The probe, being conducted by the Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC), is also looking at whether a police constable was "obstructed" from doing their duty when investigating the collision.

The commissioner was left shaken but not hurt following the smash.

Her Mercedes struck another car before crashing into a tree in Princes Road.

The IPCC was called in to investigate amid allegations Mrs Barnes did not have the correct insurance.

A spokesman for the IPCC said: "The IPCC is investigating whether the Police and Crime Commissioner for Kent, Ann Barnes, may have committed a criminal offence by not having in place appropriate insurance to cover business use of her own car when she was involved in a road traffic accident on September 16.

UNDER PRESSURE: Ann Barnes faces another tough test of her position amid the IPCC probe

"The investigation will also determine how long the relevant insurance was not in place, if that is the case, and how many miles the PCC travelled on business use while uninsured.

"The IPCC is also investigating whether a police constable was obstructed in the execution of their duty when initial enquiries into the PCC's insurance cover were being made by Kent Police."

When asked to comment on the case, her office declined.

Mrs Barnes has endured another torrid time as the county's first elected PCC.

The most high profile was in the summer when she appeared in a Channel 4 documentary. It caught her unable to explain what she did and bringing her dogs into the office while a vital meeting took place. She was widely criticised for taking part in the show and accused of tarnishing the reputation of the officers she is tasked with overseeing.

Having swept all aside to win the role in 2012, she also made headlines for the wrong reason after failing to check the social media outlets for Paris Brown, her new youth commissioner. Miss Brown, 17, from Sheerness, stood accused on making racist and homophobic comments and was forced to step down just days later.

Fresh blow for hospital A&E after latest report highlights its failings HEALTH bosses at the Medway Maritime Hospital have insisted steps to improve its accident and emergency (A&E) department are already under way after a damning report this week found it remained riddled with problems.

The report, published by health watchdog the Care Quality Commission (CQC), stated the hospital was failing to protect patients from inappropriate and unsafe care.

Assessment of patients also remained flawed according to the report. In one incident, following the inspection at the end of August, inspectors found one patient had been left waiting at A&E for over 12 hours.

It is the latest blow for the hospital which was put into special measures following an inspection in July 2013.

The report said: "The pace of change remained slow; the ability to introduce change was hindered by the continued lack of leadership within the department.

"However, we were reassured that the trust was in the process of appointing experienced nurses to lead the workforce as well as commissioning external specialists in emergency medicine to help improve the safety of the department."

Dr Phillip Barnes, acting trust chief executive of the Medway NHS Foundation Trust, said: "We realise the challenges before us and are fully committed to providing the high quality of care our patients deserve. Work is taking place across the organisation to ensure we can provide high quality and efficient healthcare in a sustainable way."

The problems even reached the House of Commons after newly-elected Ukip MP for Rochester and Strood, Mark Reckless, raised the issue during Prime Minister's Questions.

David Cameron said: "It will take time to turn round a hospital that did have very high rates of mortality and still has challenges... the NHS is under pressure but the key thing is how we respond to the problems."

Parliament hears of concern over Sheppey Crossing safety

A CAMPAIGN for better safety on the Sheppey Crossing has reached the House of Commons.

Conservative Sittingbourne and Sheppey MP Gordon Henderson raised the issue during a debate over roads.

The crossing was the scene of one of the biggest crashes in UK history when 130 cars collided in thick fog in September 2013.

Earlier this year, a mother and son were also killed. Concerns have been raised over there being no hard shoulder and a lack of lighting.

Mr Henderson told Parliament: "Something must be done, and it must be done soon."

Transport minister John Hayes said: "The Highways Agency has agreed to meet him as soon as is possible to discuss concerns."

Ukip blunder as it confuses top cathedral with a mosque

THE Thanet South branch of Ukip was left red-faced this week after mistaking Westminster Cathedral in London for a mosque.

The gaffe happened after the BBC's Daily Politics show held an opinion poll on whether Nigel Farage 'has what it takes to be Prime Minister' outside the cathedral.

At that point the Thanet South branch of Ukip tweeted, "perfect place to hold vote in front of a mosque in London. The BBC's random means selective".

Martyn Heale, chairman of the Thanet south branch of Ukip, said: "It was an innocent mistake that is now going around the world it seems. It was made by a long standing member and it's not going to happen again."

Banksy mural shipped for sale at Miami art fair

AN ORIGINAL piece of work by street artist Banksy, daubed on to a wall in Folkestone, has been flown to the US to be sold at auction.

The work, entitled Art Buff, appeared overnight on a wall in Payers Park.

It coincided with the launch of the town's popular arts triennial.

Many hoped the mural would remain in the town to continue to attract visitors. But the owners of the wall insisted after repeated vandalism attempts, it was safer for the image to be moved and sold for charity.

It has now been flown to the US where it will be sold at a Miami art fair.

It is expected to fetch around £500,000.

Watchdog critical of how animal campaigners have been treated by police

By Maria Chiorando

maria.chiorando@archant.co.uk

POLICE have been criticised over their handling of animal rights campaigners protesting outside the Port of Ramsgate.

It follows a report by the Independent Police Complaints Commission, which has upheld an appeal from a campaigner over the force's treatment of those who gather to voice their opposition to the export of live animals to the Continent.

They believe the trade is cruel and should be banned.

The complaint by Reg Bell claimed police unfairly imposed a so-called Section 14 order on protestors in order to 'corral' them into a small holding area during a protest in 2012.

Section 14 involves anyone taking part in a protest having to remain in a designated area.

It can only be imposed if a senior police officer believes serious damage to property or other people, or unlawful acts or intimidation could take place as a result of the protestors' activity.

The IPCC felt that Kent's former chief constable, Ian Learmonth, who retired from Kent Police in January, did not have grounds to impose the order.

A spokesman said: "The IPCC upheld an appeal... it found the former chief constable arguably lacked a reasonable belief that it was the purpose of the organisers of the protest to intimidate, which is necessary to impose a Section 14 order.

"The IPCC requested the Kent Police and Crime Commissioner raised the issue with a suitable person responsible for public order to ensure that any future restrictions on protests are properly imposed."

Assistant Chief Constable of Kent Police, Jo Shiner, said: "We have continued to engage with protest groups, the ports, and other relevant agencies in our efforts to ensure the facilitation of both the export activity and the right to peacefully protest. The port is incredibly busy, and can be dangerous place.

"The use of the Section 14 order allows people their lawful right to protest without putting themselves or officers in danger."

GOLDEN: Sochi star Lizzy Yarnold

Duo named on prestigious award shortlist

GOLDEN girls Lizzy Yarnold and Charlotte Evans have both been named on the shortlist for the BBC Sports Personality of the Year award.

The shortlist for the prestigious title was unveiled earlier this week.

Miss Yarnold, 26, won gold at the Sochi Winter Olympic Games at the beginning of the year in the skeleton events and was rewarded by an open-top bus tour from Sevenoaks to her home in West Kingsdown.

Meanwhile Miss Evans, 22, from Chatham, was guide skier to the visually impaired Kelly Gallagher, who is also on the list, in the Sochi Paralympics.

They are up against some pretty tough competition, however.

The other nominees are golfer Rory McIlroy, footballer Gareth Bale, gymnast Max Whitlock, newly crowned Formula One world champion Lewis Hamilton, swimmer Adam Peaty, boxer Carl Froch, dressage rider Charlotte Dujardin, and athlete Jo Pavey.

A panel including sports people like Rebecca Adlington, journalists and BBC executives has composed the shortlist. The public can vote for their favourite by phone and online on the night.

The winner will be announced on December 14 in a live show.

Paedophile jailed for ten years after sting

A PAEDOPHILE who attempted to hitch from his home in Somerset to sexually abuse an eight-year-old girl, has been sentenced to 10 years in jail.

David Collins, 51, had been exchanging messages with two women where he described how he wanted to carry out sexual acts on their daughter.

What he didn't realise is that he had, in fact, been communicating with undercover police officers.

As he attempted to hike to Maidstone to carry out the abuse in April, he was picked up by police on a slip road on the M4 in Somerset.

Collins was charged with arranging the commission of a child sexual offence and arranging the involvement in pornography of a child under the age of 13.

Following a trial at Maidstone Crown Court he was found guilty of both offences and sentenced to 10 years behind bars.

A six-year sentence for arranging child pornography will run concurrently to his 10-year sentence.

Prison after £50,000 of drugs in freezer

A COUPLE from Sittingbourne who stored almost £50,000 worth of drugs in a fridge-freezer have been jailed.

Daniel Fleming, 30, and Alyx Costa, 23, both formerly of White Hart Mews, Milton Regis, stored a significant quantity of amphetamine and cannabis at their home. It was discovered by police following a raid on June 5.

Fleming pleaded guilty to two counts of possession with intent to supply and was jailed for three years and eight months. Costa admitted one count and was sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

The amphetamine has been valued at £47,000 but the total price could potentially have risen to hundreds of thousands of pounds by the time it reached the street.

Investigating officer Detective Constable Mark Donovan said: "Despite attempting to distance themselves from the drugs found in their home, it was clear that Daniel Fleming and Alyx Costa were near the very top of the amphetamine supply line.

"I am pleased these drugs have been seized."

Mother and daughter are attacked on train

A WOMAN and her 18-year-old daughter were verbally abused and then shoved off a train when it arrived at a station – prompting British Transport Police to appeal for information.

The victims had boarded the 6.09pm London Victoria to Dartford train when trouble arose between Kidbrooke and Welling.

When the doors opened at Welling, the couple were pushed out of the doors.

After the case was reported, an investigation got under way.

BTP's PC Jason Weston-Collinson said: "A 45-year-old woman and her 18-year-old daughter were verbally and physically assaulted and then pushed off the train at Welling station.

"As part of our investigation we are appealing for anyone on the train who witnessed the incident to come forward."

Anyone with information can contact British Transport Police on 0800 405040, or text 61016. Or call Crimestoppers on 0800 555 111.

Dartford Crossing to close for Dart Charge

TRANSPORT chiefs will be studying the impact of dispensing with the toll booths on the Dartford Crossing this week, as the new 'free-flow' system got under way at the weekend.

The scheme is designed to ease congestion and will see drivers paying the new fee of £2.50 remotely after using the crossing or registering for an account.

As part of the switch to Dart Charge, the crossing will closed to southbound traffic between 11.30pm tonight (Sunday) and 5.30am tomorrow morning. Further closures will be also be necessary to clear the booths and prepare new road markings.

On Saturday night the north-bound tunnels were closed. Diversions are being made via the Blackwall Tunnel.

For full details, see page 9.

Drink-drive campaign revs up for festive season

KENT County Council's winter drink driving campaign will get under way this week – with a number of events taking place across the county.

It will combine with the police's crackdown on the roads during the festive season, as officers look to eradicate the threat posed to others by those who insist on driving after drinking.

Events will take place around the county and are happening this week in Ashford, Canterbury and Maidstone.

It is hoped to encourage people to stick to non-alcoholic drinks if they are going to be driving that night or the morning after.

All change at Dartford Crossing

It's out with the old – booths and queuing – and in with the new, a pay in advance system, at the infamous bridge and tunnel. Maria Chiorando bids farewell to the tolls and looks at what motorists can now expect to see...

By Maria Chiorando

Maria.Chiorando@archant.co.uk

IT is estimated to have cost up to £62 million, and, after much anticipation, the new Dartford Crossing payment system – Dart Charge – finally came into force today.

Dart Charge will see the payment booths removed from the crossing, and a new remote payment scheme put in place in order to help ease congestion levels.

Since 6am, drivers have no longer been able to pay using cash at the payment booths.

Work to remove the booths and improve the road layout on the approach to the crossing began on Friday with overnight closures.

Highways Agency project director Nigel Gray said: "The payment booths have been part of the Dartford landscape since 1963 but they contribute to congestion and cause delays.

"That's why they are being removed and we are introducing the new payment system. From November 30, drivers will no longer pay at the booths. Instead they will pay in advance or by midnight the day after crossing, helping to speed up journeys."

The road works will continue until next spring, which is when the full benefits of the new system are expected to be felt.

TRANSITION: It's all change

WHAT PHYSICAL CHANGES ARE BEING MADE TO THE CROSSING?

CONNECT Plus Services, the company that operates the M25, is helping with the building work at the crossing.

Erwan Huerre, its transitions manager, said: "Initially, we'll work to demolish the southbound booths and drivers should see the benefits travelling over the QEII Bridge after the first weekend of work.

"On the northbound side, the works will take longer to complete because we need to construct a new tunnel safety system.

"During this time, road users will still need to travel through the existing barriers, but they won't be able to stop and pay here anymore.

"The reason we need to keep the barriers at this stage is to stop over-sized or non-compliant vehicles from using the tunnel."

Until the work is finished, the Highways Agency have said that drivers can expect some delays but all work is being planned to minimise disruption.

During the building work, temporary speed limits and road layouts will be in use so drivers should follow instructions on road signs.

FACTS ABOUT THE DARTFORD CROSSING PAYMENT BOOTHS

THE booths were first used in 1963, from the opening of the first Dartford Tunnel.

Initially there were 12 booths, with six in either direction. By 1985 this had risen to 12 in each direction.

In 1991, when the QEII Bridge opened, the booth numbers were increased to 14 for northbound traffic and 13 for southbound.

The booths are staffed by around 130 people: a combination of staff who work in the booths, and general staff who move between the booths, responding to incidents and overseeing the automatic toll booths.

Initially payment booth staff wore peaked caps and uniforms.

The booths are a piece of transport history. The Dart Charge team are in discussions with London Transport Museum and Dartford Museum about the possibility of them taking on a booth as an exhibit once they've been removed from the Crossing.

Further information and answers to frequently asked questions can be found at www.gov.uk/highways/dartford and everyone can subscribe to receive updates via this page.

THE SAME BUT DIFFERENT: The Dartford Crossing is now booth-free

HOW TO PAY FOR THE CROSSING

UNDER Dart Charge, drivers will no longer stop at a barrier to pay the charge.

Instead, a number of cameras will record number plates of all vehicles using the tunnel or bridge.

Motorists will then have until the following day, to pay online, by phone, by post or in one of thousands of Payzone retail outlets.

As a general rule, if it is possible to pay the congestion charge in a shop, it will be possible to pay for the Dartford Crossing there too.

Earlier this year, the Highways Agency struck a deal with Payzone, so that drivers can pay in various shops.

Nigel Gray form the agency said: "Making it as easy as possible to pay Dart Charge has been a top priority for us. We recognise that not everyone will want to pay online or by phone. This deal with Payzone will mean drivers will be able to pay at thousands of convenient locations across the country."

Mark Mellor, of Payzone, added: "The Payzone convenience network will make it easy for a consumer to top up their account, or pay Dart Charge in cash, at a local Payzone store throughout the whole of the UK.

"Drivers will be able to pay their Dart Charge at one of thousands of convenient retail outlets across the country with a Payzone terminal."

Drivers can make one-off payments, or set up a pre-pay account if they are regular users - they will receive savings up to one-third on every crossing made.

To make one-off payments, motorists can go online, at www.gov.uk/dart-charge, or they can call 0300 300 0120 from a mobile phone or landline, and pay using a card.

Payments can also be made by post, by writing to PO Box 842, Leeds, LS1 9QF.

For drivers who already have an account with DART-Tag, there's no need to set up a new account – instructions will be sent to account holders to explain how to transfer to Dart Charge.

Motorists who don't have a Dart Charge account will need to pay the charge in advance or by midnight the following day for every crossing made within the charging hours (6am – 10pm) after November 30.

If the toll is not paid by midnight on the day after crossing, a penalty will be issued.

The crossing will be closed between junction 2 (for the A2) and junction 31 (for the A1306), to northbound traffic between 11.30pm on Saturday 29 and 6am in the morning of November 30.

It will then be closed to southbound traffic between 11.30pm on November 30 and 5.30am in the morning of December 1.

Row over statue to wartime bravery of overseas volunteers

Unveiling in Gravesend marred as argument over who had original idea for overseas volunteers' memorial breaks out, Chris Murphy listens to both sides...

THE unveiling of a statue of a Sikh Second World War flying ace has been marred by a row over who was originally behind the idea.

Gravesham District Council's eight-foot-tall statue of Squadron Leader Mahinder Singh Puji DFC was revealed at St Andrew's Gardens in Gravesend on Friday.

Designed to be a tribute to all those who served from overseas, the image was unveiled by Air Vice-Marshal Edward Stringer CBE and cost £70,000 most of which was raised by the local community and various groups as part of the Mayor's Fund.

Council leader Cllr John Burden said of the statue: "It will look fantastic and I am proud that we have such a beautiful piece in our borough which commemorates brave, heroic people who served Britain."

But a row has now broken out with Palbinder Singh claiming he originally took the idea of the project to the then Gravesham mayor in 2008.

But he told us he is dismayed at the idea being "hijacked" by senior councillors and officials at the Sikh temple, the Gurdwara.

Mr Singh said: "In 2008 I came up with the idea of a statue to recognise and honour the thousands of Sikhs who had died in war for Great Britain."

"I set up a small committee, and originally the plan was that the statue should be of Nand Singh VC.

"I announced The Sikh Statue project in 2008. My team and I then worked on the project conducting site visits, consulting with council planning officers, plus defence personnel and the British Legion."

Two years later, the idea changed slightly, as Mr Singh explained: "After the death of Squadron Leader Puji in 2010 we decided a statue of him would be more appropriate. In 2011, I was keen to harness the might of the Sikh community to the project - and whilst I am Sikh - I do not attend the Gurdwara and so am short of contacts there. I emailed the then Mayor of Gravesham Tanmanjeet Dhesi, who is the son of the then president of the Gurdwara, and asked for his help.

"When I met him at the Gurdwara he agreed to help organise funding, and that he would 'champion this community project to the Gurdwara committee and leader of the council.'"

Mr Singh says he was not asking him to take over the project. He said: "Further, all out of no-where he was telling me that there was already a project underway at the Gurdwara and that we should join forces.

"At my earlier meeting with him there was no such project mentioned, nor did he show me any designs for one, though I did show him our designs for the Puji statue."

An email from the mayor, Mr Dhesi in late December 2011, also told Mr Singh: "I think it would be ideal to have a launch event within the council chamber/Civic Centre in the near future, so that we can publicise this among the borough's key residents, and further build upon our numbers of those willing to support this much worthwhile initiative."

Mr Singh, a senior police officer, said: "In 2012, the next thing I heard - second hand, from someone else - was that our project was about to be launched in the Woodville Halls to great fanfare by the leader of the council and the mayor. I was not even invited.

"They saw that the project was a fantastic idea and worked to achieve overriding control of the project that we had been working on since 2008.

"I was finally invited to the launch and I was allowed to speak, and I pointed out forcefully that this was my project that they had stolen from me.

"While they did eventually allow only one member of my team to sit on their large committee, we were effectively marginalised."

Mr Singh concluded: "While we are delighted that this has happened, we are appalled at the behaviour of the former Mayor and the council leader who took overriding control of this project and now use it to promote themselves."

Gravesham councillor Mr Dhesi, now also a prospective parliamentary candidate for Labour, has highlighted Mr Singh's involvement with a statement to the Sikh24 website.

He told them: "The concept of a turbaned Sikh soldier statue was conceived by various individuals in varying forms. In due course, the Sri Guru Nanak Darbar Gurdwara Gravesend would have installed such a statue within their complex.

"However, I was contacted by one such individual Palbinder Singh in my capacity as Mayor in 2011, to try and unite the community, council, Gurdwara and other groups to reach a consensus for a statue in the town centre.

"After various discussions with council leader John Burden, Gurdwara president Jaspal Singh Dhesi, CONTROVERSY: Dispute should not mar the bravery being marked senior council/Gurdwara members and other community leaders, it became apparent that consensus could be reached on local war hero Squadron Leader Puji. The council would help to locate a suitable location and head up the tendering process for finding a sculptor, etc if the funds could be raised from the community.

"Within a month, largely thanks to the Gurdwara committee and wider community leaders, we managed to raise almost £70,000. I'm so proud of our local Gravesham community for coming together so quickly for an initiative which will help to further integrate us all."

Meanwhile council leader John Burden commented: "Pal Singh was on the working group and he had no fight to get on it. He was specifically invited to be on it.

"We even changed dates of some meetings so he could be there.

"He was one of the people who had the idea of a statue, as was the Gurdwara."

BRAVERY OF MAHINDER SINGH

SQUADRON Leader Mahinder Singh Puji DFC is one of the 2.5 million servicemen who came from the Indian subcontinent, the largest volunteer army in history.

In 1940, he was one of 18 qualified Indian pilots who volunteered for the Royal Air Force. He had a distinguished career during flying with 43 Squadron and being awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for his bravery.

Born in 1918 in Simla, India, he spent his last few years in Gravesend and died on September 18, 2010 aged 92. He was chairman of the Indian ex-Services Association.

Douglas Jennings, who was chosen to produce the statue, said: "Puji was a wonderful subject to research and sculpt given his heroism alongside cultural and RAF influences.

"Puji is a fabulous representation and example of those who gave up everything to fight for Britain and the Commonwealth. He is a shining example, completely right to represent all those who fought. This man wasn't asked to fight, he chose to.

"Puji refused to wear the protective head gear because of his religion. He was shot down twice, lost many of his friends and colleagues, but he continued to fight, as did many Sikhs."

He added: "This has been an issue that has been bubbling under the surface for some time and has been mentioned at times, which is why I have been at pains to ensure there is no credit shown on me. I have given credit to Pal Singh and the Gurdwara - it is a community achievement."

Protect the heart of your town centre by supporting local stores

Small Business Saturday next weekend will be a rallying call for everyone to get behind independent traders on our high streets. As part of our Shop Local! campaign we explain why they need your help

By Jamie Weir

jamie.weir@archant.co.uk

SMALL Business Saturday, like Christmas, comes but once a year, but the message from small, independent retailers, is that they need support all the time if our high streets are to be saved.

The concept of smaller businesses banding together to attract shoppers through their doors, and into town centres, was – like many commercial ideas – one which crossed the pond, arriving in the UK just last year.

Billed as a grassroots, non-political, non-commercial campaign, it aims to highlight small business success and encourages consumers to 'shop local' and support small businesses in their communities.

This year's nationwide national event will be on December 6.

It coincides with Kent on Sunday's campaign in the run-up to Christmas calling on our readers to Shop Local! to help protect the livelihoods of our high street traders.

And where 'Black Friday' marks the start of Christmas shopping for the big, power retailers, Small Business Saturday witnesses the kick off for independent traders across the country.

"We are going to be having a market on in celebration of the event, and to try and encourage people to come down and support their local small business," explains Richard Simm, chairman of the Association of Pantiles Traders in Tunbridge Wells.

He continued: "Small Business Saturday is still in its early days as an event, but it has been really successful in America, and we're hoping it'll really start the beginning of the Christmas shopping season for the traders I represent.

"For us, it's really crucial to remind people that they need to use us, or they will lose us."

That is a sentiment which is being echoed across the county, with the Sevenoaks and District Chamber of Commerce telling KoS it's a big fan of the event as it encourages people to make use of local shops, rather than jumping in their car and heading off to out of town shopping centres or large chain retailers.

Robert Brown, the head of marketing at the chamber said: "Our ethos at the chamber has always been to keep business local and we encourage all of our members to take advantage of Saturday and maximise the opportunities for their business.

"Sevenoaks is thriving with small businesses right now and we have some fantastic boutique shops on our doorstep that are right on trend. A number of local businesses are already highly active on Twitter and we encourage mentions of Small Business Saturday locally using the hashtag to raise your profile."

And it isn't just retail or business associations getting in on the event, with Dover District Council offering free parking throughout its car parks to try and attract shoppers in to support businesses.

Council leader in Dover, Paul Watkins, told KoS: "We are part of a national scheme supporting small businesses, and were involved in last year's event. We want to support small, independent retailers in their main shopping season, and one of the ways to help was to encourage footfall by offering free parking.

"We are also going to be extending the relief we offer the businesses by offering free parking in the week before Christmas as well."

And other politicians are getting in on the act, with the MP for Tunbridge Wells, Greg Clark, set to attend celebrations of independent traders in the town on the day.

Alison Parmer is the development manager at the Federation of Small Businesses – a campaign group which works to support small businesses in the UK.

She told KoS: "We are absolutely supportive of this as a campaign. We'll be taking part in the day by giving local MPs guided tours of independent businesses in Maidstone and in Tunbridge Wells. There will also be a free small business workshop in Faversham for small business owners to go and get advice on how to grow and make their businesses better.

"It's a great event, and something which really marks the build up to Christmas for many of the small retailers in the county. It's the first Saturday in December, with shoppers gearing up for Christmas, and is perfect for just reminding people what makes our high streets that little bit special. That is exactly the kind of promotion we need for small businesses across Kent.

Add Richard Simm from the Pantiles: "It has been really hard for many traders in our area over the past few years. We have seen a few go under, which is obviously sad, but we have been constantly working to try and ensure that people are attracted to come and shop here. We've put on loads of events to try and draw crowds in, which has worked on some levels.

"However, even now what the traders I represent are telling me, is that people's spending power seems to be down. We are witnessing a decent level of footfall, with lots of people coming here, but that isn't necessarily converting into the number of sales we need."

And that, according to Mrs Par-

“ People's spending power seems to be down. We get a decent level of footfall, but that isn't converting into the number of sales we need ”

Richard Simm,

Association of Pantiles Traders

mar, is why the day is so important – to help introduce people to other businesses they may not otherwise have been aware of.

She said: "The great thing about Small Business Saturday is that it encourages people to go out and explore some of the businesses they may not otherwise ever go into.

"It really highlights the range, craftsmanship and talent of small businesses across Kent. It helps introduce people to businesses they may just have walked straight past, and shows them the level of quality they can get from some of the businesses which are out there, rather than simply going to the big retailers to buy something generic and mass produced."

One of the event's grassroots supporters is banking giant American Express. As part of the celebrations, it commissioned award winning pop artist, Sir Peter Blake - best known for creating the Beatles' legendary Sgt Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band cover - to create a piece of art to promote the event. He chose to use one of Kent's businesses in the work – Flawless Jewellery, in Westerham.

No stranger to Kent, he was born in Dartford and attended college in Gravesend. He explained: "The notion of a 'Nation of Shopkeepers' is embedded in our folklore and the wonderful variety of today's independent shops as well as the character that small businesses bring to a local area make them an ideal subject matter for modern pop art. Having worked at a local butcher at the age of 13 I have also experienced the dedication and hard work that goes into running a small shop. I am thrilled to be lending my support to a campaign that champions small businesses."

CAMPAIGN: WHY WE'RE URGING YOU TO SHOP LOCAL! THIS CHRISTMAS

AS the rush to the shops begins in earnest ahead of the festive season, we are calling on our readers to not spend all their hard-earned cash online this year.

It will come as news to no one that our high streets - the traditional hub of any town centre - have declined dramatically in recent years.

But while our shopping habits are changing, the risk is that we lose a vital cog of our communities.

Town centres should be where we come to unite as a community, providing jobs, prosperity and the opportunity for a shared experience.

So Shop Local! is calling on you to remember that failure to visit and spend in your local stores may well mean they're not here this time next year. It really is a case of 'use them, or lose them'.

Even if you just allocate 20 per cent of the money you intended to spend online this year, it could make all the difference.

Because there is one thing you can be sure of – you'll miss them once they're gone.

KCC comes out against airport expansion as noise levels rise

With more and more homes in west Kent 'blighted' by flights to and from Gatwick Airport, Kent County Council has changed its position on a second runway at the airport and is calling for changes to current flight paths to cut the levels of noise, as Jamie Weir reports...

KENT County Council has changed its mind and is now opposing plans a second runway at Gatwick Airport.

The revelation came after a report was published which highlighted the plight of residents in the west of the county who have seen an increase in noise to 'unacceptable levels' as the number of flights has grown.

The council says that it is also pressing for measures to be put in place to ensure that Gatwick Airport protects residents from what it calls 'intolerable' noise by ensuring there are periods when no flights travel overhead.

The council had previously supported the development of a second runway at Gatwick, stating in its policy document Bold Steps for Aviation – which was published in May, 2012 – that the airport was its preferred option for expansion.

However, changes in flight paths, which have only recently begun, have pushed the council to reconsider its position.

KCC leader Paul Carter says residents are having their lives blighted by the constant noise which has risen to unacceptable levels.

Cllr Carter said: "The noise impacts on west Kent from Gatwick's current single runway configuration are already unacceptable and a potential doubling of these impacts with a second runway would be intolerable."

"In line with the EU Single European Sky initiatives [an initiative which ensures that design, management and regulation of airspace is coordinated throughout the European Union], the National Air Traffic (NATS) control service has started to implement changes in flight paths, which has brought to our attention two things – a concentration of flight paths over west Kent; and that the number of night flights at Gatwick during the summer period is three and half times those coming in and out of Heathrow, which is a massive issue."

"This change in flight paths has been intolerable for a significant number of residents in that area and brought us to the conclusion that if they are going to pursue this policy in line with the EU Single European Sky initiatives, expansion of this airport and expansion of night flights must not happen."

Campaigners have stepped up their fight against the proposals for a second runway at Gatwick since the Aviation Commission – chaired by Sir Howard Davies – stated that the airport was being considered as an option for increased aviation runway capacity in the south east.

One of the parish councils which joined the fight against expansion at Gatwick is Chiddingstone. Its chairman, Richard Streatfield, says that issues from the airport have got worse for residents in the area recently.

He said: "Our parish council is a member of the High Weald Councils' Aviation Action Group. The group represents thousands of disaffected residents, unhappy with this proposed expansion. We understand that aviation expansion will happen in the future, but Gatwick have gone too far this time."

"The new flight paths are abysmal and have made things so much worse for so many more people. Chiddingstone, Penshurst, and many, many other areas are now blighted by almost constant noise. And it isn't simply the flight paths, but the fact that Gatwick has changed the way it uses airspace. They are concentrating so many planes into small areas that it has become unbearable for many."

Brendan Sewell is the chairman of the Gatwick Area Conservation Campaign which is fighting against the expansion of the airport.

He told KoS that the new flight paths were destroying new large swathes of west Kent.

He said: "These new flight paths that Gatwick has introduced have caused a great deal of anger and outrage over the past few months. The airport decided to introduce new concentrated flight paths which have led to large numbers of planes flying the same route."

"A gliding path has also been introduced, which means that planes fly in over a straighter route, regardless of population centres. This has meant that some areas of west Kent, such as Penshurst, are being affected a great deal more."

And KCC says that complaints from residents affected by noise has also increased as flights over parts of west Kent have risen sharply, from between 10 and 20 flights per day to a maximum of 150 as the new flight paths have been introduced.

Cllr Carter said: "It is quite clear that residents in west Kent are already suffering from significant levels of disturbance as a result of increased air traffic over the last few years and the recent changes in flight paths."

"We want Gatwick to provide respite for BLIGHT: The lives of people in west Kent under the flight path of aircraft flying in and out of Gatwick have been blighted by 'intolerable' noise levels. KCC is now calling for 'no flight' periods these residents by varying flight paths – and have met with the airport's chief executive to discuss this.

"We want Gatwick and the NATS air traffic control service to re-design the airspace to include the use of multiple arrival and departure routes, to provide predictable, rotating respite, and spread the burden of over-flight more equitably between communities."

The noise isn't simply limited to day time flights either. Gatwick has one of the least restrictive night time air transport movement limits. These are enforced between 11.20pm and 6am every night. The levels which had been set by government saw Gatwick allowed 3,250 flights over-night during winter, and 11,200 in summer. In comparison, Heathrow has far fewer flights allowed – just 2,550 in winter, and 3,250 in summer.

Cllr Carter said: "The current number of permitted night flights is simply unacceptable and has resulted in a massive increase in the number of complaints from residents whose quality of life has been disrupted.

"We want the Department for Transport to reduce the night movement limit at Gatwick to at least a level that is comparable with Heathrow."

That acceptance is something that Mr Streatfeild is happy about. He told KoS he was glad the council had accepted the impact night flights had on residents.

He said: "The affect of sleep deprivation is truly serious for people. There are residents out there who are being woken six or more times a night, and it really is disturbing. This is exacerbated because it isn't a busy urban area. Because its quite quiet, other than the flights, the noise from planes makes much more difference.

"The huge number of flights people are having to put up with is actually making people ill."

And according to Mr Sewell, the problem isn't simply restricted to noise – he says it has a serious economic impact as well.

He said: "One of the biggest problems with these new flight paths is that people are subjected to not only being blighted by noise and disturbances shattering the tranquillity, but also by a blow to house prices.

"Many people will have spent large sums of money buying a nice house in the countryside for peace and quiet, and these new flightpaths will knock literally thousands off the price they can get back.

"That's outrageous for these homeowners. They end up in a situation where they can't enjoy the house because their peace has been shattered, but also feel trapped, because no-one wants to buy the house. There is no escape for these people."

But that isn't the only economic impact that the area may face according to Mr Streatfeild. He says that a whole industry could be in danger if Gatwick's second runway development were supported.

He said: "One of the things which the High Weald is known for is its natural beauty. We have a tremendous amount of tourists who come here specifically for that – around 2 million each year. They aren't going to want to come if we have noisy flights overhead every minute of every day. There are 560 aircraft movements a day; that destroys the peace, quiet and natural surroundings.

"Businesses that rely on tourism are also under threat. Hever Castle, Penshurst Place and other attractions are all saying that they may have to shut their doors if a new runway is allowed. That would mean the loss of jobs, and historic attractions."

A spokesperson for Gatwick Airport said: "We will continue to work closely with Kent County Council to illustrate that Gatwick is doing as much as possible to reduce the impact of aircraft noise on local residents, including detailed work exploring whether 'rotating respite' can be provided to communities most affected.

"We will also continue to make the case that Gatwick would bring a significant boost for the local economy, including thousands of jobs, apprenticeships and opportunities for businesses."

The Aviation Commission declined to comment on the announcement from KCC with a spokesman telling KoS it was highly unlikely it would issue a statement on the subject.

Looking ahead to our key seats at 2015 election

Ahead of May 8, KoS highlights the six seats the parties will be fighting over...

Maria Chiorando

Maria.Chiorando@archant.co.uk

EVEN the most confident and competent of gamblers would struggle to place a bet on the outcome of next year's general election.

Just three months ago, no one could have predicted that Nigel Farage's Ukip could have made such in-roads – let alone doubling its MP count by over-turning a huge Tory majority in Medway.

The rise of Ukip, and its potential to split Right-leaning voters – and now, it appears, appeal to a disillusioned Left too – has been just one aspect of a rapidly-changing political landscape, which has seen the Liberal Democrats start to flatline, and the Labour's vote collapse under the rudderless leadership of Ed Miliband.

Ukip will not be forming the next government, but it could yet hold the balance of power, as the nation appears perhaps destined for yet another coalition.

The morning of May 8, the day after polling day, is likely to spark the most fascinating of cross-party discussions.

But what of Kent? Following Mark Reckless' win in Rochester & Strood, we identify six of the key seats and how they could pan out.

■ What do you think? Enter the debate. Share your views. Write to: The Editor, KoS, Apple Barn, Hythe Road, Smeeth, Ashford TN25 6SS. Or email editorial@kosmedia.co.uk.

SITTINGBOURNE & SHEPPEY

Current MP: Gordon Henderson (Conservative)
Majority: 12,383

BACK in August, a leaked Ukip memo revealed its apparent 'top 12' target seats. Sittingbourne and Sheppey was one of them.

And there has certainly been lots of whispers over the months that Gordon Henderson, who holds a comfortable Tory majority in the seat, is a candidate for possible Ukip defection.

He's denied it, however – although admitted he had been approached – and since then it has all gone rather quiet.

He told KoS: "The simple answer to whether I will be defecting is no.

"I have made it very clear on a number of occasions that I believe in Conservative principles and I will always be a Conservative. I have been approached by Ukip, but I politely declined.

"It does seem perverse that if they think I am good enough to invite to their side, that they would try and target my seat."

Of course, if a week is a long time in politics, the three months since the 'top 12' list leaked is a lifetime.

Ukip has made great strides since and may have shifted its focus. But with a strong showing in the local elections last year, Ukip will be there or thereabouts on polling day.

Which will be another major blow for Labour.

This seat is traditionally a bellweather for the nation's political mood.

THE MAN IS NOT FOR TURNING: Tory Gordon Henderson

Derek Wyatt won it in 1997 when Tony Blair swept in... and lost it in 2010 to Mr Henderson.

Labour's performance here will be fascinating to observe.

Pundit Iain Dale said: "This seat is similar to Gillingham, insofar as it's a seat that Labour need to hold power, but how can they turn a majority of that size?

"I can't see that majority being overturned."

VERDICT: The Tories will hold onto this one.

ROCHESTER AND STROOD

Current MP: Mark Reckless (Ukip)
Majority: 2,920

UNLESS you had your head in a bucket this month, you'll not have missed Ukip laying claiming to its first Kent MP.

The decision by Mark Reckless to turn his back on David Cameron and run into the welcoming arms of Nigel Farage left the Government flat-footed.

By the time it had got its act together, the Ukip bandwagon had long since rolled into town and made merry.

But while Mr Farage was quick to point to the triumph – and there is no denying it was a remarkable win – the size of the victory was not as sizeable as perhaps the pundits expected.

From a near 10,000 majority for Mr Reckless wearing blue in 2010, it became a majority of 3,000 after he'd pulled on his nice new purple jumper.

A huge swing, no doubt about it, but not enough to make the Tories give up hope of reclaiming it next May.

The Conservative candidate Kelly Tolhurst has vowed to return in 2015 to win back the seat – possibly with some of the polish that critics claimed she lacked this year.

Once upon a time – just a mere

WILL HE WIN NEXT TIME?: UKIP candidate Mark Reckless and his wife Catriona arrive at the polling station at the Baptist Institute Hall few months ago – Labour would have entertained the idea of Ukip and the Tories splitting the Right-leaning vote, allowing them to slip up the inside.

However good the Labour candidate was though – and Naushabau Khan certainly impressed many commentators – Ed Miliband's party saw Ukip pinch a decent share of its voters too.

Iain Dale, who lives in Pembury, is a political commentator and presenter for LBC radio.

He told KoS: "I think it's very difficult to call that one because I don't think Mark Reckless won by as much as people thought, and it's difficult to tell where his vote came from.

"The Conservatives had a 10,000 majority before, and that will give them heart for the fight."

What remains to be seen is whether the mood of the electorate remains the same next year – a by-election is a different animal to a general election, and Ukip could well lose many of the protest votes they hoovered-up from disaffected Conservative, Labour and Lib Dem voters.

VERDICT: Almost impossible to call... but the Conservatives might just win it back.

DOVER

Current MP: Charlie Elphicke (Conservative)
Majority: 5,274

DOVER MP Charlie Elphicke had the smallest majority of any in the county at the 2010 election, defeating incumbent Gwyn Prosser and leaving Labour without representation in the county.

Again, the area is traditionally a solid barometer for national feeling, and it is true that every general election victory since 1979 corresponds to who holds Dover.

Labour knows it must perform here, but with the port on its doorstep, the issue of immigration is almost certain to dominate. Which will, once again, mean Ukip will no doubt look to secure some points too.

Political commentator Iain Dale says: "Like Gillingham, Dover swings with the political winds – if Labour or Conservative win nationally, they will win in Dover.

"Charlie Elphicke has a high profile – he has portrayed himself as a really local MP, and that will help him.

"Labour's Gwyn Prosser won't be standing – and he would have been a bigger fight than candidate Clair Hawkins, as it's always hard to take over from a candidate who was as respected as Mr Prosser.

"Charlie Elphicke is popular across parties, and well-respected.

"Dover can always surprise you. I would predict that Mr Elphicke will hold it."

VERDICT: Conservatives to cling onto this one.

GILLINGHAM AND RAINHAM

Current MP: Rehman Chishti (Conservative)
Majority: 8,680

THIS seat will see a battle that makes the political personal, when Conservative Rehman Chishti takes on his former mentor and Labour candidate Paul Clark in a clash that will be the most hotly-contested seat in Medway.

Political commentator Ian Dale explains: "If Labour are to win the election, they have to win seats in places like Gillingham. This is one of those seats that swings with the political winds.

"Paul Clark has a high media profile, and has been well-regarded, but Rehman Chishti has done a lot locally – this will be close."

Mr Chishti, who the Telegraph once described as a 'rising star' of the Conservative Party actually started his political career in the Labour camp. A former colleague of Mr Clark, and a Labour councillor for Gillingham North, he stood for the Labour Party at the 2005 general election for Horsham, but lost to Francis Maude.

Mr Maude, Mr Chishti claims, was instrumental in his decision to look towards David Cameron's rising Tory party.

He defected to the Conservatives later that year.

Having helped Mr Clark in 2005, by 2010 he stood against him. And as the wave of public opinion swung away from Labour, so he was returned as MP.

CONTEST: Paul Clark

Now, in a mouthwatering return bout, the two go toe-to-toe in round two. Few would expect Ukip to figure here.

Paul Clark told KoS: "There is some history, but ultimately he is a Tory, he is my opponent.

"At the time of his defection, he said he had seen the light, and thought that Tony Blair was wrong, when weeks before that he had been supporting him.

"Generally with people who jump ship, there's an indication that they are going to do so – there are these cases where people swap and you're not surprised."

Mr Dale adds: "Mr Chishti had a large majority, which is going to take some turning over – I would have thought it would be a Conservative victory, but Ukip could dig into the Conservative vote, so it could go to Paul Clark."

VERDICT: Labour could just claw it back.

THANET SOUTH

Current MP: Laura Sandys (Conservative)
Majority: 7,617

THANET SOUTH will surely be one of the most watched seats in the country, as Nigel Farage looks to secure his very own seat in the corridors of power at Westminster.

No stranger to the seat – he competed for it and lost in 2005 – Ukip performed well in the local elections last year and few would bet against Mr Farage emerging triumphant.

With incumbent Laura Sandys already confirming she is stepping down in 2015, the disillusioned Tory voter does not even have familiarity to fall back on.

Craig Mackinlay – a former Ukip man himself – has been drafted in to fight the blue corner, but its difficult to see how he, or indeed anyone, can hope to stop Mr Farage sweeping all aside.

"If Nigel Farage doesn't win this," says political pundit Ian Dale, "it will be the end of his political career. He said he would step down if Ukip didn't get any MPs, and now they have Douglas Carswell and Mark Reckless.

"I think it would be a huge psychological blow to him if he doesn't win it."

Mr Farage told KoS: "Is the seat mine to lose? You tell me. I think we have excellent prospects across Kent, we can be winners in Kent, we showed that in Rochester."

Would defeat deliver a fatal blow to his political career?

"That's for you to speculate," he said, "but I will say that this is the most open general election I've ever seen in my life time."

Adds Iain Dale: "If Laura Sandys was standing, she would make it tough. The Conservative candidate, Craig Mackinlay is untested, although he did stand against Ann Barnes in the election for the police and crime commissioner."

When Mr Farage was selected to represent the party in Thanet South he said he believed Ukip 'may win enough seats to hold the balance of power'.

STANDING DOWN: Laura Sandys is set to leave

Once again, Labour have been left wondering just why the debate is between blue and purple. Especially as this was once their seat. Stephen Ladyman swept in as Tony Blair led Labour to victory in 1997, before Mrs Sandys reclaimed it for 2010.

Were Labour to win this seat, and few doubt Will Scobie is a strong, local, candidate, it would be even more surprising than if Mr Farage lost it.

VERDICT: Unless there's a tidal wave scale revolt, Nigel Farage for Ukip will win it.

SHEPWAY

Current MP: Damian Collins
(Conservative)
Majority: 10,122

SHEPWAY has been a Tory-stronghold since 1950, when the constituency of Folkstone and Hythe was created, but opposition is creeping in, as support for Ukip rises in the area.

They performed strongly at last year's county elections, suggesting a swell of support for the party, who won four out of the six seats in the Shepway district.

The other two council seats are held by the Conservatives and Green Party.

In addition to this, Janice Atkinson, one of four Euro MPs for the south east, has been selected to stand for Ukip.

She is no polished performer, however, having already made a high profile gaff by being filmed telling anti-racism campaigners to 'f-off' while out campaigning in Ashford town centre.

Political pundit Ian Dale feels she poses little threat. He explains: "Janice Atkinson is a ludicrous proposition.

"She's an inappropriate choice because people won't like her there – she is not the type who will go down well in that area.

"She should have gone for one of the Medway seats."

It seems unlikely to see past it being another Ukip versus Tory race for the line.

What will be of most interest will be how the Liberal Democrat vote holds up here. Candidate Lynne Beaumont is an active and high-profile figure in Shepway and came second in 2010, taking more than 30 per cent of the vote,

STRONG POSITION: MP for Folkestone and Hythe Damian Collins compared with Damian Collins' winning 49.4 per cent.

With their vote being annihilated everywhere, it will be interesting to see how it is affected.

Adds Mr Dale: "The Lib Dems always think they have a good chance at this seat, but they have never really had a sniff at it.

"Damian Collins has been a really good politician, and people like him – there's no way it won't stay Conservative – this is the closest one to a dead cert."

VERDICT: The Tories to win comfortably.

KoS Verdict

ONLY TWO SEATS?
UKIP Leader Nigel Farage

IN a county traditionally so true blue, it is hard to imagine the colour changing dramatically. But with Ukip's rise comes remarkable fragility to the political landscape in this county.

Ukip's ability to apparently convince huge swathes of voters that immigration is the number one issue, and that the EU lies at the heart of that issue, is forcing all political parties into a narrow argument.

The reality, of course, is that the issues impacting on Kent – and the nation for that matter – are far more complex, and far broader.

It now seems inevitable that Ukip will make some gains in Kent.

But it still seems hard to think it will emerge with more than two seats – and one of those will only be carried by Nigel Farage's remarkable strength of personality.

Labour, on the other hand, must surely be facing a humbling.

It has made none of the gains it would have hoped to have done, and its message has evaporated under Ed Miliband.

As for the Liberal Democrats? Well, it would perhaps be the biggest political shock of all time if it somehow managed to win anywhere. In fact, coming second anywhere may well be considered a major triumph.

Will we finally get to enjoy a white Christmas this winter?

Probably not, but amateur weatherman expects February to be the coldest yet

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AS THE focus turns towards the festive season, dreams once again turn to there being a white Christmas – especially after last year's was a case of torrential rains and floods.

But it seems once again we will be left disappointed – at least that's according to one of the county's leading amateur weatherman – the aptly named Dave the Weather.

According to his unconventional methods, the best snow fans can hope for this year will be a little frost.

But he does say February could prove to be one of the coldest yet – with plenty of snow and ice.

The amateur weatherman from Edenbridge has once more been reading the vital signs offered up by nature to predict what the winter season holds for us.

He does this all year round, and said his "previous prediction was pretty well up to scratch, August reasonable, September very dry and October wetter than anticipated, but October is a fickle month in any year".

Dave King uses ancient sayings, or saws, that he matches up with what he sees, to make his predictions. And he claims an impressive success rate.

He explains: "In October, one expects leaf-fall, or at least the change of colour from green to reds, browns and autumnal colours, yet in late October the trees still had leaves and they are for the greater part still green.

"The retention of these leaves gives rise to some interesting sayings in October and November concerning the winter weather; and, since I only use tried, tested, proven and reliable sayings, these needed to be heeded for they will answer the question 'will we have snow this winter?'."

"There's been precious few acorns and ash seeds this year, but a massive store of everything else, be it hips, haws, seeds, berries or fruits. There is a massive larder out there for birds and animals plus the wine-making humans too, for a wonderful crop of sloes this year. There were virtually no frosts to speak of in October which normally means November will be a lot frostier.

"The wind direction on September 29 was a little confusing for many, in that it was near dead calm. However at this location it was south to southeasterly and this is the direction that will predominate here for the next few months, which would indicate colder, dryer weather than those are further west that experienced a SW wind on the 29th.

"For those in 'dead calm' the following days were south to southeasterly, especially up the east coast of the UK and I suggest that that is the direction for the coming few months."

His unusual methods may not convince the masses, but he insists nature's signs are fail-safe methods of predicting what the weather will be like for months to come.

He adds: "I often get adverse comment that my predictions are not in line with what others normally expect in the south east. I have been doing this, and using the same methodology – always being improved too – for many years now, and here in the south east we are liable to the influence of the near Continent more than the rest of the UK.

"The higher, on the whole, and dryer conditions in this corner of the UK are quite noticeable on any daily weather chart.

"Conversely too, when the winter takes hold and the easterly winds start to blow off the same European mainland it can also be colder too than one might expect. I write what the methodology provides, I do not write to be controversial, if the data is inconclusive, which is rare, then I say so.

"So the wind on September 29 indicates that the wetter milder weather of last winter will not re-appear. It will be colder and dryer than last winter – and yes we will definitely see frost and snow this coming winter too."

He added: "Immediately by looking at the moon phases the word 'frost' sticks out; fair and frosty in my terminology is dry, sunny, calm days but with cold dry calm frosty nights."

He added December can be a very stormy month, especially just after Christmas.

He said: "The sayings of this month are really accurate and will give an excellent foretaste of the year to come.

"Will it snow at Christmas? On the easterly coastline I think not. I think a dry cold sunny, frosty conditions will prevail – which of course gives good fruit and grain harvest the following harvest – but snow, though cold, is unlikely.

"There is so much advance data in the methodology already that backs up this prediction. A cold dry frosty month is what I predict."

And what of the new year? He added: "Whereas December 2014 had frost as the influence for the month, January shows rain, but it is also a stormy month. I add a caveat here, the wind will be easterly, and this could, if cold enough, give rise to snow falling instead of rain. Should that be the case, then with stormy windy conditions, snow will drift and cause some travel problems.

"This January will be determined by the coldness and strength of the cold from the east off the near Continent and while the only real 'snow moon,' per se, is towards the back of the month, do not be surprised if snow arrives earlier."

Once more using nature's habits he said: "On October 7, locally, six varieties of duck arrived from northern climes to spend the winter here; the following day four different types of geese also arrived from the same regions.

"For these to arrive so early indicated some really cold weather to come, and, nature being what it is, the cold arrived two days later from where they originated – the first really heavy snowfall of the year – which co-incidentally arrived on the first 'snow moon' of the year. Nature is never wrong."

Mr King said a hot June predicts an appalling February. He added: "Maybe now it becomes clearer why the migrating birds, ducks and geese arrive early, why there are so many seeds, hips, haws, berries and fruits on the hedgerows; why the sheep have such thick coats, why the English onions have such thick skins, why there so many dead nettles in the roadsides.

"Another thought to ponder; remember back to 1990, a beautiful hot, dry summer, not dissimilar to the summer just past, and this was followed by the winter of 1990/1 – one of the coldest Februarys ever recorded at 1.9C as the average monthly temperature.

"February is always a cold month – this 2015 February may well be extremely cold – nature has prepared well – we must not ignore all these signs. It could be the coldest for many years."

Bafta delight for Bagpuss creator

Peter Firmin has been handed a top award for his life-time contribution to children's television over the last 50 years

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

LEGENDARY children's TV creator Peter Firmin admitted he was a little "overwhelmed" when he turned up to pick up a prestigious award last Sunday.

Mr Firmin, 85, along with his creative partner Oliver Postgate, created some of the best-loved characters in children's television during the 1960s, '70s and '80s.

Best known for creating Bagpuss, he was joined on stage at the Bafta Children's Awards by his daughter Emily, who portrayed Emily, owner of the shop where Bagpuss lived, in the original, short-lived, series.

Mr Firmin continues to live and work at his home at Blean, near Canterbury, where he created many of his best known characters. Emily Firmin works as an artist in nearby Whitstable.

Mr Postgate died, aged 83, in Broadstairs almost exactly six years ago.

Between them, they brought to life the likes of Ivor the Engine, the Clangers and Noggin the Nog through their Smallfilms production company.

Appearing at the prestigious British Academy Children's Awards at Camden's The Roundhouse venue last Sunday, he received a special award recognising his outstanding contribution to children's media and the entertainment industry.

The show was presented by another legend of children's TV – Bernard Cribbins.

And there was no denying his star status when he arrived on the red carpet to be greeted by calls from photographers to pose for them. Mr Firmin admitted it had all been "a bit overwhelming".

Speaking to KoS this week, he smiled as he said: "Inside, we had two tables of 10 right at the front and what struck me was the noise inside that place. We were right near some big speakers and it really went through you when they played music.

"But it was wonderful and I still can't believe I have this award. Of course if Oliver was here, he would have been on stage with me – we were a team and always will be."

Mr Firmin, who knew in advance he was to get the award, said: "I am amazed that the things we did here in the barn at Blean with the sort of materials we had has been remembered when all this high-tech stuff is around with its computer generated images.

"Ours were very homemade things, yet people seem to remember them.

"Whether I was deserving of this award, I don't know. I was totally surprised when they offered it to me. People like David Attenborough get things like this, not me."

Of the night itself, he said: "When it came to my bit, I was fairly calm.

"I even managed to get Emily to come and bring me Bagpuss while I was talking – I had a Clanger on stage with me too.

LEGEND: Peter Firmin, Bagpuss, and his special award from Bafta for his life-long contribution to children's TV

"And everyone loved it that Emily was there herself. I did think that it would have been nice to have Oliver there too."

Before he went on stage, Bafta screened part of a BBC Wales documentary on the pair, and Mr Firmin admits he found that emotional.

"That was so touching," he said, "because it ended with Oliver and Bagpuss and strangely enough it was Bernard Cribbins narrating it, and it was him who handed me the Bafta award."

The former art teacher added: "We were never trendy. We did what we thought was right. If you're never trendy, you never go out of fashion.

"We were earning a living. Oliver and I were working on our own with a few helpers and we just had to keep going. There wasn't an enormous fortune to be made because the budgets were pretty small in those days. We just had to keep coming up with ideas. We never thought that we were producing things for generations to come.

"Oliver came up with the first stories – Alexander the Mouse and Ivor, things like that – and, later on, Noggin was my idea, and Bagpuss. Just the characters, mind you; he wrote the stories.

"Because we worked together so well, they just seemed to work. And we weren't working for a committee.

"Nowadays, they have to have things very carefully vetted with lots of input from other people; whereas we were allowed to do what we thought was best.

ALL SMILES: Mr Firmin accepts the award with daughter Emily (above), and then introduces a Clanger to host Bernard Cribbins

"Considering how primitive our methods were and how homemade everything was, it's amazing that they've lasted so long and people still remember them."

Harvey Elliott, chairman of Bafta's children's committee, said: "Peter Firmin helped lay the foundations for the industry we see today, all from his small barn in Blean. His legacy is delighting and enchanting a whole new generation with the upcoming remake of family favourite The Clangers.

"Over the past 50 years, Peter's work has thrilled, entertained and inspired generations of filmmakers and animators and he is more than deserving of the Special Award at this year's British Academy Children's Awards."

A new Clangers show is currently in production with Mr Firmin as a consultant and scripts penned by Mr Postgate's son, Daniel.

A DOUBLE ACT CAPABLE OF CREATING CHILDHOOD MAGIC

FOR millions of people, Bagpuss is a cornerstone of their childhood; "a saggy old cloth cat, baggy, and a bit loose at the seams".

Generations exposed to the mere 13 episodes created, originally broadcast between February and May 1974, instantly fell in love. And with endless repeats over the years to come, many others did too.

In 1999, a BBC poll named it the greatest children's character of all time. In 1987, both Mr Firmin and Oliver Postgate picked up honorary degrees from the University of Kent for their achievements.

Bagpuss was created and filmed at a barn in Blean where Mr Firmin lived and worked.

Oliver Postgate – the instantly recognisable narrator and writer of so many of their works – lived just a few hundred yards down the road.

There, using stop-motion animation, a time-consuming process of shooting individual frames to emulate movement, they brought to life a character who continues to generate thousands of pounds in merchandising each and every year and whose role in popular culture shows no sign of slowing.

Today, Mr Firmin remains a remarkable individual. Along with his wife Joan, who knitted the original Clangers and made the likes of Madeleine the rag doll and Gabriel the toad in Bagpuss, they remain active and artistic.

Mr Firmin, now 85, remains bright and engaging and enjoys a good working relationship with Daniel Postgate, who inherited his father's share in the Smallfilms production company after Oliver's death in 2008.

They have, in recent months, been working with producers behind the return of the Clangers – with a new series set to hit TV screens around the world next year. And another generation prepares to be raised on the remarkable talents of the Firmin and Postgate double act.

There's enough brownfield land for 70,000 new homes says countryside group

But these figures may be misleading, writes Jamie Weir...

KENT has enough previously developed land for at least 70,000 new homes, according to a report from countryside campaign group, the Campaign to Protect Rural England (CPRE).

The report, which is titled From Wasted Space to Living Spaces, claims to have identified brownfield – previously developed – land for the houses.

The stock of brownfield land in Kent totals around 1,600 hectares according to the campaign group – this, argues the charity, should mean that development on undeveloped, or greenfield, land becomes unnecessary.

The charity says much of the land available for development is in the north of the county. Dartford has 846 hectares of brownfield land sitting vacant, while the Medway Towns, says the charity, have a total of 713 hectares.

And other areas of Kent also have large tracts of previously developed brownfield, with Dover stocking almost 300 hectares of the land, and Tonbridge and Malling sitting on 336 hectares.

With average housing densities in the UK sitting at around 23 homes on each hectare, Dartford alone could potentially accommodate almost 20,000 new houses without building on un-spoilt countryside.

Senior planner at CPRE Kent, Brian Lloyd said: "We have long been arguing for development to be focused on brownfield sites.

"At a time when there is great pressure for growth, by building on brownfield we would protect our countryside and regenerate our towns and cities."

And the change the charity is calling for seems to be something the government is willing to consider, with the housing and planning minister, Brandon Lewis, saying he welcomed the report from CPRE.

Mr Lewis said: "This government wants to see the maximum amount of brownfield land used to build new homes, while also maintaining protections for our beautiful countryside.

But while CPRE Kent says the report shows there is no need for more greenfield development, Paul Watkins, the leader of Dover District Council (left), says the situation is much more complex than the numbers suggest.

He said: "Not all brownfield sites are created equal. Some simply aren't suitable for housing for one reason or another and some are economically unviable. They just cannot be built on in a profitable way. That land clearly shouldn't be included in these figures.

"In Dover, we have brownfield sites which have planning permission for housing but which won't be built on unless there is some sort of enabling development to make them profitable for developers.

"Equally, there needs to be the correct mix of housing with other development on brownfield sites. It isn't just a case of building as many houses as possible."

And a development consultant who chose not to be named, but who works throughout Kent, told KoS that CPRE was being disingenuous with its presentation of the figures.

He said: "It's funny how it has given this headline figure. However, once you scratch the surface, there are a few issues. For instance, the charity appears to be including brownfield sites like Lodge Hill in Medway in its numbers, yet it doesn't support development there."

Is fracking company looking for methane?

A leaked email shows fracking firm could now be looking for shale gas's 'evil twin' in the east of the county despite saying it had returned its licences giving it exclusive rights to extract here, writes Jamie Weir...

FRACKING may have taken a step closer in Kent after it was revealed in a leaked email that the only company to have licences to explore for oil and gas in east Kent is looking to drill in the Tilmanstone area.

Coastal Oil and Gas, which is run by chief executive Gerwyn Williams, gave back many of their Petroleum Exploration and Development Licences (PEDL) earlier this year, with Mr Williams stating that there was no economically viable gas to extract.

The licences, which are issued by the government, give the company which holds them exclusive rights to drill for oil and gas in the area.

The company had been in possession of licences to explore for oil and gas which had led it to apply for planning consent to drill exploratory boreholes in Guston, Sheperdswell, Woodnesborough and Tilmanstone.

But despite applying for planning consent at three sites, the company chose to hand back much of its licensing, reducing the areas it could drill in from around 355 square kilometres to just 95 square kilometres.

However, a leaked email, which was sent to KoS by campaigners from the group East Kent Against Fracking (EKAF) – a pressure group which wants the controversial practice banned – shows that Coastal Oil and Gas is still actively pursuing exploration for gas in the county.

Rosemary Rechter is the chairman for the campaign group.

She told KoS: "Mr Williams stated that Coastal Oil and Gas Ltd had now relinquished their licences for gas exploration in east Kent, as well as their permit at Woodnesborough.

"This statement, like so many from the industry, was contradicted shortly afterwards by Mr Williams himself in an email in which he said 'Guston, Sheperdswell and Woodnesborough have all been surrendered but we have retained Tilmanstone area. Our intention is to drill an exploration hole in the coal measures'.

"It is ironic that this news should come so soon after a debate that so completely trounced the arguments for fracking."

But chief executive of the company, Gerwyn Williams, told KoS that when he said much of east Kent was of no interest to the company, he meant it.

He said: "I'd like it made clear that we have no intention of looking at Sheperdswell, Woodnesborough or Guston for drilling. We have handed the licences back and won't be seeking to drill in these areas.

"To be honest, it really isn't that attractive to drill in Kent, as it doesn't have shale measures. We would be looking for coal bed methane if we were to drill here.

"The economics of drilling coal bed methane are limited compared with shale gas, so drilling here is not as appealing as it was for us."

Coal Bed Methane (CBM) is a natural gas (methane) which has been trapped in coal seams underground. East Kent is a prime location for the gas' extraction because of the various seams of coal which lie in the area.

Many former collieries which were closed never fully extracted the reserves of coal which was mined in east Kent in the late 80s.

Julie Wassmer is an environmental campaigner who has fought against fracking coming to Kent. She told KoS it would be immensely destructive if any drilling were to take place at Tilmanstone – whether it were for CBM or shale gas.

She said: "CBM has been described as 'the evil twin' of shale gas in the family of extreme energy. As with shale, there are similar negative effects on the environment. These can include water contamination, leaks of fugitive methane into the atmosphere and the industrialisation of the countryside.

"However, there are other risks more specific to CBM which include a depletion of water table and possible subsidence. The 'produced' water which is brought up from these wells may even contain a concentration of heavy metals and radionuclides."

These heavy metals and radionuclides could potentially be extremely toxic.

And any drilling in east Kent, say campaigners, could lead to serious contamination issues for the chalk aquifer of the North Downs – this vital water source serves 70 per cent of the county's commercial and domestic consumers.

Ms Wassmer said: "There is a high risk of methane and other gases being mobilised by any drilling operation, including for an exploratory borehole, and subsequently migrating into the aquifer.

"The same process could, in extreme cases, re-activate any of the high angle faults in the coal measures and create new fracture patterns, allowing upward migration of gases and liquids into the aquifer, which is itself heavily fissured.

"From a water resources view point, this amounts to a high risk operation, and failure could result in the irreversible contamination of a major water supply source."

But Mr Williams said that residents in east Kent had nothing to be concerned about, and although he was unwilling to talk of whether any area in Tilmanstone had been looked at in detail, he was willing to tell KoS where he would like to drill if given the chance.

He said: "Snowdown Colliery would be our preferred location to drill. It's a good site, and particularly good for us, as it has old coal workings. That is likely to be where we would be successful at finding and extracting CBM in east Kent."

WHAT IS CBM AND HOW IS IT EXTRACTED?

COAL Bed Methane is methane which has been trapped in coal seams underground.

To extract the gas, a borehole is drilled into the seam. Often it is necessary to pump large amounts of water out of the coal seam to lower the pressure and allow the gas to flow out. It can sometimes also be necessary to 'hydraulically fracture' the seam to extract the gas – this involves pumping water mixed with chemicals into the borehole at high pressure, to fracture the coal and let the gas flow.

TALENTED: The producers are excited about this year's cast

Take a magical carpet ride for panto's anniversary run

Production team promise 'biggest and best' yet as Aladdin flies into Marlowe

THE team behind this year's pantomime at the Marlowe Theatre in Canterbury is vowing to pull out all the stops to marks its tenth anniversary of staging the hugely popular show.

Aladdin opened on Friday and runs until January 11. It is traditionally one of the county's most successful productions.

Speaking to KoS this week, just a day before the show opened, director Paul Hendy was looking forward to the curtain going up. He said: "Rehearsals have been going very well; the cast are all fantastic, and working with them so far has been great.

"This is our biggest and best panto yet - we have our strongest cast. We also have some really amazing effects - people are going to watch it, and not be able to believe their eyes."

He added: "We have a magic carpet ride, that's one of the effects.

"We also have - how should I put this without giving too much away - two brilliant large things on the stage - I can't say more than that!"

It is the tenth year Evolution Productions, the company run by Mr Hendy and his wife Emily Wood - who live near Sandwich - have created the Marlowe's annual big money spinner.

Mr Hendy says: "As it's our ten year anniversary, we wanted this to be huge.

"So far it feels like a fitting show, with the sets, effects and of course a good mix of celebrities in the cast."

Scott Maslen, who is best known as Jack Branning from EastEnders, is starring as Abanazar.

Mr Hendy says: "I think people will be really surprised by Scott.

"They've seen him in EastEnders, and he's a great actor, but here you'll also get to see a really great comic performance."

Mr Maslen played Abanazar in panto in Bournemouth last year - the same role he will be playing in Canterbury.

He said: "It was hard work, but a lot of fun. It was good being back on stage again after so many years on TV. I was keen to do another pantomime, especially a character like Abanazar - so great to get your teeth into!"

Alongside Scott Maslen will be Phil Gallagher, Mister Maker from CBeebies, playing Wishee Washee.

Mr Gallagher, who comes from Gillingham and who went to Canterbury Christ Church University, has appeared in several pantomimes and was at the Marlowe last year.

Ben Roddy and Lloyd Hollett will also be returning to the Marlowe for Aladdin; both were in Jack And The Beanstalk, last year, which was seen by more than 90,000 people. Mr Roddy will once again play the dame, this time, Widow Twankey while Mr Hollett will be PC Pongo.

The rest of the cast are: Masashi Fujimoto as Emperor of China, Sabrina Alouche as Spirit Of The Ring, David Albury as Aladdin. Rosa O'Reilly will take on the part of Princess Jasmine and Bentley Kalu will appear as Genie of the Lamp.

Aladdin started its run at the Marlowe Theatre on November 28 and runs until to January 11 2015.

Eagle flies in to ensure Verdi's Rigoletto hits all the right notes

By Maria Chiorando

maria.chiorando@archant.co.uk

OPERA producer Ellen Kent has recruited a bird of prey for a starring role in an upcoming production.

The bald eagle, called Kayla, was recruited from the Eagle Heights Bird of Prey Centre in Eynsford and will feature in her interpretation of Verdi's classic Rigoletto which appears at the Orchard Theatre in Dartford next month.

Kayla is the guest of the celebrated Chisinau National Opera and Philharmonic show which promises a stunning traditional production recapturing the decadence of Renaissance Italy with lavish sets and opulent costumes.

Ellen Kent is no stranger to using live eagles in her productions.

She sees them as an ideal platform to remind people of the breathtaking beauty of these birds while also under-lining why they are under such threat.

Kayla's story is certainly a remarkable one.

She was stolen from the wild in Canada as a chick and raised by

EAGLE: Kayla to star in Verdi's Rigoletto, which is based on a work by Victor Hugo hand in captivity.

Later, confiscated from her captor, who was sent to prison, she was released back into the wild.

However, having been hand-raised, she had no hunting skills and therefore was reduced to stealing food.

She was caught in Winnipeg, Canada, and taken into captivity. It was thought that she would have to be put to sleep as she was too aggressive.

However Alan Ames, owner and founder of Eagle Heights, obtained a special licence to bring Kayla to the centre.

She has now been at Eagle Heights for 14 years, and is thought to be approximately 20 years old.

This will be her first appearance in an opera, however.

The show will be at Dartford's Orchard Theatre on Thursday, December 4 at 7.30pm.

For more information or to book tickets visit orchardtheatre.co.uk or call the ticket office on 01322 220000.

ENJOY: Build up your appetite with a stroll. All pictures: National Trust

Take a winter walk around some of our most picturesque venues

Eaten one too many mince pies? Desperate for a little fresh air? Then stretch your legs this Xmas

THERE'S nothing like a winter walk to build up an appetite - or work off some seasonal excess. And with some of the nation's most historic sites open this Christmas, there are plenty of interesting routes you can take.

The National Trust is renowned for its stately homes and fertile gardens and grounds. And with many of its managed sites open from Boxing Day onwards, there's the perfect opportunity to take a stroll in a picture-postcard landscape.

Explains a spokesman: "You can experience some outdoor delights from avenues of frost-covered topiary and borders packed with sensational colour, to ice-rimmed lakes, wind-swept beaches and breath-taking vistas."

The following all have special guided walks on Boxing Day and New Year's Day. Check each venue's website for details of opening hours.

Chartwell

Family home of Sir Winston Churchill, you can literally follow in the historic leader's footsteps by spending time in his garden or take one of the many estate walks.

If you want to learn more about him, then visit the winter exhibition, Death of a Hero, commemorating the 50th anniversary of his death and his lasting legacy. Families can try out the Life and Legacy trail around the garden, which leads to the exhibition.

Ightham Mote

Enjoy the peaceful setting of this romantic moated manor house, with its gardens, orchard, water features and woodland walks through the Kent countryside.

Join a Boxing Day or New Year's Day trek, complete with a tasty breakfast to fuel the informal guided walk through the estate or visit over January.

Knole

Whilst Knole's show rooms close for conservation during the winter months, the parkland is as alive as ever. Choose from a range of downloadable walks that offer glimpses of the resident deer herd, flat routes for relaxed strolls and a longer walk to nearby Ightham Mote.

Scotney Castle

During winter, Scotney Castle is transformed into an almost magical landscape, with frost and ice settling on the moat, grass and plants surrounding the ruins of the medieval castle. Further afield, the estate is home to walks through beautiful parkland, woodland and alongside the historic Hop Farm - pick up an estate map from visitor reception and explore three way marked trails.

White Cliffs of Dover

Enjoy an atmospheric walk along the cliff tops throughout winter, spot some of the winter visiting birds including the guillemot out at sea, short eared owl feeding over the grassland or the unmistakable waxwing in the hedgerows. On New Year's Day, join a free turn up and go walk from the White Cliffs visitor centre to the lighthouse at 11am.

Just don't forget to wrap up warm!

How to beat the stampede in the rush to secure the must-have toy

Once it was the Rubik's Cube, Action Man, Barbie and the Furbee. Now this year's most in-demand gifts have been revealed. So just what do you need to do to get your hands on the desperate dozen?

AS THE weather turns colder, parents need to be careful not to miss out on getting Frozen this Christmas.

Toy industry experts predict that toys linked to the hit Disney film Frozen will be flying off the shelves during the festive season, and mums and dads whose little girls have set their hearts on items such as the Disney Frozen Snow Glow Elsa doll, which sings Elsa's signature song Let It Go, would be wise to snap it up as soon as possible.

Elsa is one of two Frozen dolls in the Top 12 of this year's DreamToys list of the 72 predicted best-selling toys for Christmas, selected by a panel from the Toy Retailers' Association.

Toy shop owner Gary Grant, chairman of the DreamToys committee, says: "We could sell empty boxes with Frozen written on them at the moment - the demand for Frozen products is exceptional, and not just for the two dolls in the Top 12, but all of them.

"Parents will be racing all round trying to track down all the Frozen items this Christmas. I would really recommend that if children have got Frozen items on their Christmas list, parents get them early and hide them away."

And it's not just little girls who run the risk of missing out on the toy they've set their hearts on this Christmas. Mr Grant says some of the 'techy toys' that boys might have on their wish-lists, like the Zoomer Dino - Boomer - a radio-controlled dinosaur - and the Teksta T-Rex dinosaur, which responds to voices, lights and sounds, "potentially run the risk of being short".

At £99.99 (RRP), the Zoomer Dino - Boomer is the most expensive item in the DreamToys list, says Mr Grant, who points out that about half of the Top 12 toys this year are £25 or under. It's also worth noting that many shops have offers on and you can find some of these toys for half the recommended retail price listed here.

Coming in under the £25 mark is the £19.99 (RRP) Little Live Pets Bird Cage, a chirping bird which records children's voices and repeats what they've said.

Also in the Top 12, but at the higher price of £58.99 (RRP), is My Friend Cayla - a doll that could drive parents crazy this Christmas. Cleverly working through an iPhone or smartphone app, Cayla understands and listens, and will even answer questions. So if the kids are quiet, the doll could still be chattering.

For boys there are, of course, weapons such as the Nerf Demol-the biggest ever Transformer. There's even a new Spider-Man (Hasbro £34.99 RRP) in the top 72 DreamToys list.

For preschool children, the Toot-Toot Animals Safari Park - animals that make noises and move round a safari park track, is likely to be in huge demand too.

"Nobody makes any money not having what people want in stock," he says, "and at the moment the industry has relatively good stocks."

"I'm not trying to whip up a frenzy over toys running short - there's adequate toys around, but things change. At this time of year, toy companies are doing a month's worth of trade in a week, and stocks change quickly.

"If something catches on, shortages can appear very quickly. Don't panic, but do what's sensible."

Up to the best of the panto season

FOR many, Christmas is not complete until they enjoy an outing to the pantomime with their family or friends. It remains a valuable and well-loved part of the yearly theatre calendar.

Some big names have been recruited in years gone by, and Kent has seen everyone from rapper Vanilla Ice to former Young Ones star Adrian Edmondson and original Star Trek cast member George Takei tread the boards for the annual knees-up.

And this year there is a huge variety of shows on offer around the county, such as Aladdin, Sleeping Beauty and Peter Pan.

With performances currently under way and running up until January, there is plenty of time to see them.

Pantomime remains as popular as ever, with its anarchic mish-mash of drama, comedy, music and double entendre delighting audiences.

A number of familiar faces will be popping up in this year's productions, with Strictly Come Dancing's sharp-tongued judge Craig Revel Horwood taking on the role of Captain Hook, EastEnders actor Scott Maslen starring in Aladdin and Steps star Ian 'H' Watkins playing the role of Prince Charming.

Here is our guide to 10 of the top pantomimes in Kent to enjoy this year.

Passion fruit and pomegranate pavlova layer cake

HIT BBC cooking competition The Great British Bake Off has released a new recipe book full of festive treats in time for Christmas.

The Great British Bake Off: Christmas is the ultimate Bake Off Christmas collection with all of Paul Hollywood's and Mary Berry's Christmas masterclass recipes.

It also includes new bakes from all four winners plus other contestants.

This beautifully tiered pavlova will make an impressive centrepiece for everyone to gather around.

Ingredients

Serves 12-16

- 750ml double cream
- 2 tablespoons Cointreau
- 3 tablespoons orange curd
- 3 tablespoons lemon curd
- zest of 2 limes, thinly pared
- seeds of 2 pomegranates
- runny honey, for drizzling
- 10 medium egg whites
- 525g caster sugar

For the topping and filling:

- 4 passion fruit, scooped out and sieved, seeds discarded
- 3 tablespoons caster sugar

Method

1. Heat the oven to 110°C/225°F/gas 1/4. Line 3 baking sheets with baking paper, then draw a 27cm circle on one sheet and a 22cm circle and an 18cm circle on the other sheets.

2. Whisk the egg whites in a large bowl using a hand-held electric whisk, until they form stiff peaks. Still whisking, add the sugar, a little at a time, until the mixture is thick and glossy.

3. Spoon half the mixture over the largest circle, and divide the rest between the smaller two, putting slightly more on the middle-sized circle. Use the back of a spoon to spread the mixture to the edges of your circles and make pretty swirls and peaks. Transfer to the heated oven and cook for 5 hours, then turn off the heat and leave in the oven to cool completely.

4. To assemble, stir the passion fruit juice and sugar into the double cream – the mixture will thicken with the acid from the juice. Stir in the Cointreau and curds to make a luscious thick cream. If it is not thick enough (some passion fruit are juicier than others), whisk a little; if too thick, add a splash more cream.

5. Place the largest meringue on a flat serving plate and spoon over one-third of the cream. Scatter with some pomegranate seeds and lime zest. Top with the second largest meringue and spoon over another third of cream and more seeds and zest. Top with the smallest meringue and finish with the rest of the cream, seeds and zest. Drizzle all over with the honey and serve.

SAINSBURY'S, 6 DEEP MINCE PIES, £1.30: Nice golden colour, right amount of crumble, filling had a nice orangey flavour and was plentiful. ★★ ★★

MARKS AND SPENCERS, 6 ALL BUTTER MINCE PIES, £1.80: Large in size but not enough rich and tasty filling. Pastry a bit dry. ★★ ★★

TESCO, FINEST 6 ALL BUTTER DEEP FILLED MINCE PIES, £2.50: Best looking out of the bunch, lovely fruity flavour, and good pastry. ★★ ★★

WAITROSE, 6 ALL BUTTER MINCE PIES, £2.50: Tasting team's favourite. Rich, buttery pastry and a really moist and flavoursome filling. ★★ ★★ ★★

Get stylish at Bouverie Place

AS SHOPPERS flock to Folkestone shopping centre Bouverie Place in the run-up to Christmas, one young star in the making will be preparing for her first steps into the world of fashion modelling next year.

Jasie Hibbard, 12, was chosen as the overall Modelsearch winner from a contest staged at the popular retail centre.

Jasie was chosen from over 230 people who entered the Bouverie Place Modelsearch event and will now join models from seven other shopping centres at a professional fashion photo shoot in London in spring 2015.

As part of her prize, Jasie took part in a photo shoot on location at Bouverie Place.

As our picture shows, she is modelling an outfit from the latest collections at New Look.

There is all the winter and party fashion you could wish for at the centre's shops including TK Maxx, Next, Primark, New Look, George and Peacocks.

STYLE: Jasie Hibbard models a two-tone Chelsea check jacket £54.99 and Matilda high neck jumper £14.99, from New Look 4x4 sales set to soar?

4x4s: A Buyer's Guide Vehicles

By Steve Loader

EVEN the most optimistic weather forecasts for this winter, say it will be much colder than last time, while some experts say it could be the coldest for a century. That would be pretty cold then, bearing in mind the 'Big Freeze' of 1962.

Apart from the weather, we also need to reckon with the deterioration of Kent roads, caught between several tarmac-cracking winters and budget cutbacks – despite the county council's increased repairs programme.

So it's no wonder the traditional four-wheel drive vehicle buying season looms larger than usual, also highlighting reconciliation with the type, which earned a reputation for gas guzzling when the economy took a downturn.

From being the darlings of city dwellers who liked to suggest that they were country people, they were suddenly cast as villains.

But even 4x4s have got greener as the buying public grapples with its eco-conscience as well as that other eco – the economy. As a result, there has been a reconciliation with the 'funky chunky' 4x4 look.

Indeed, lots of so-called 4x4s or SUVs (sports utility vehicles) are not even four-wheel drive any more.

Read our special section to find out more about 4x4s and SUVs and which ones may suit you.

Size does matter

THERE are so many shades of 4x4 vehicles now, ranging from big and beefy go anywhere true off-rovers, right down to so-called 'soft-road-ers' or SUVs.

The latter might not have the ground clear-ance to go yomping over rough terrain, but drive to all four wheels can kick in for extra grip when it matters, and they're cheaper to buy and run too.

The breakthrough has been the arrival of more eco-nomical but punchy diesel engines and cheaper all-wheel drive systems, allowing the car to run in two-wheel drive most of the time, saving fuel, emissions and tyres, while automatically reverting to 4x4 if sensors recognise that traction is being lost by the rear wheels.

At the top end though, 4x4 is usually permanent with true off-rovers, and comes with two sets of gear ratios: one for normal conditions and a second and much lower set for extra power and traction when the going gets really tough.

Sometimes, this is packaged as a system that allows selection of a mode according to terrain or conditions, leaving the car to work out the best gears and chassis set-up faster than the human at the wheel.

But bulk and grunt are not everything; weight can be a curse in tough situations; lighter 4x4s can be just as effective, providing there is enough ground clearance and you don't expect Herculean climbs in mud or snow.

But is it a 4x4 you really need?

RECESION has had a seismic effect on 4x4/SUV buying habits. The need to cut back made consumers shun the higher running costs of what were generally bulkier and heavier cars.

But manufacturers countered with smaller, lighter and more convenient editions; buyers realised that they could have their 4x4 cake and eat it.

A little later, there was a further shift in the market, one seen as heresy a few years ago: 'two-wheel drive 4x4s'.

Carmakers had tried this tactic before and it flopped spectacularly; buyers may have realised deep down that being a 'townie' and driving a 4x4 was a bit of a sham, but they weren't about to give up on authentic 4x4 power.

The recession and greater eco-awareness changed that, so now we have SUVs and crossovers that look rough and tough, but sip the fuel and return lower CO2 emissions.

And removing the rear transmission from a 4x4 vehicle not only cuts weight, but can also liberate valuable underfloor space in the boot.

These 'pseudo-4x4s' come in two formats: 'SUV Lite' which are front-wheel drive versions of models also available with 4x4, and crossovers that are a rugged looking cross between family hatchbacks, SUV and MPV, mixing the best of the three types.

Thanks to the weight saving they can also be more fun to drive, suffering less body roll on bends, and deliver a smoother ride.

They also prove a point we all knew deep down: our craze for 4x4s was just as much about looks as it was about getting a grip.

So, be honest about what you want from your 4x4/SUV/crossover.

If it's about style with economy then go front-wheel drive, but if you have to battle terrain and the elements where you live or do heavy duty towing – a boat, trailer or caravan perhaps – then full 4x4 is king and you shouldn't compromise.

Do I really need a full on 4x4?

GOING 4x4 is a no-brainer if you work on a farm, or construction sites, or live in a rural area with plenty of mud or snow.

Some would-be buyers also need a 4x4 for towing; they can pull greater weights and all-wheel drive is a major reassurance when doing so.

But they are not a cheap option if you rarely need the full 4x4 potential, which is why smaller and less expensive SUVs (sports utility vehicles) or 4x4 estates have evolved.

These deliver all the image and space of a top grade 4x4, but are more economical, being lighter and usually equipped with an all-wheel drive system that mostly runs in front-wheel drive, either by manual selection or automatic function – the latter diverts more power and grip to the rear wheels if needed.

Then you must decide on the powertrain; diesel is preferred as it gives good low down power when the going gets tough. It's also better for fuel and CO2 emissions, but diesels usually cost more upfront than petrol models, so you need to cover more miles to recoup the extra outlay via fuel savings.

How many seats? Some models offer five or seven: go for the latter if you can afford it as there will always be a time when you need those extra seats, and these cars tend to depreciate less due to greater secondhand demand.

Cars designed to hold up to seven, are almost certain to have more load space too, but they may be bulkier than you need; for many people, the attraction of SUVs is getting the 4x4 look without having to worry about accessing tight parking spaces.

Festive market delivers food, drink and stars

By Maria Chiorando

maria.chiorando@archant.co.uk

ELHAM's popular Christmas farmers' market returns again this year, with a host of tasty treats and entertainment lined up.

Among them will be a children's costume parade led by local actress Pam Ferris - best known for her roles in the likes of the Darling Buds of May, Luther, and Rosemary & Thyme.

She will line-up line up alongside troubadours, a raffle and lots of stalls selling local food and hand-made gifts.

The event will take place in the village's ancient square.

Food on offer includes Christmas cakes and Kentish cheese, local cider and bread, game and meat, vegetables and cobnut biscuits.

Inside the village church there will be hand-made gifts.

It is the first time the church will be used as part of the market.

Elham Food Festival and market manager Julie Woodgate said:

"We're delighted that so many of our regular traders are returning once more, but we're also welcoming new traders to add to the diversity of goods.

"And I'm sure our raffle will be very popular, as the first prize is a KitchenAid food processor worth about £400 in the shops."

Throughout the market shoppers will be entertained by singing pilgrims duo Hayward and Parsons.

Julie Woodgate added: "You can't beat the quality, freshness and seasonality provided by our small-scale producers, the homemade pies, tasty cheeses and unusual meat like wild venison and pigeon.

"What's more, the event is a real community affair, run by local people, with the church doing the teas, the pub running the bar, local crafts people showing their skills and musicians providing entertainment. It should be a great day out in a beautiful setting."

Elham Christmas food festival and gift market takes place at Elham Square on December 14 at 12 until 3.30pm.

TRAVEL REVIEW: Japan

By Kate Hodal

THERE'S a Japanese proverb that warns: "The nail that sticks out gets hammered down." And it's this phrase I'm thinking of as I trip over an ancient spike on a thousand-year-old pilgrim path in Japan's emerald Kii Mountains.

Hiking along the ancient Kumano Kodo trail, the rusty spike is my introduction to Japan's 'abode of the gods', a region considered so sacred that everyone from Edo emperors, to contemporary octogenarians, has graced its mountain paths.

It's one of only two pilgrimages in the whole world with UNESCO world-heritage status and its cultural significance shouldn't be overlooked.

Japan can sometimes seem overwhelmingly impenetrable to Western visitors, but the nation's staggering beauty, delicious cuisine, and opportunity to step both back and forward in time, is truly a rare treat.

We begin our trip in Tokyo, at one of the capital's newest and most chic hotel additions to the skyline.

Tokyo wouldn't be Tokyo without a trip to some of its wackier destinations, so we spend a day in Shibuya, hobnobbing with Japanese teens dressed as Victorian dolls, then head to the nation's only 'goat cafe', where the two resident beasts stare curiously as we sip our bubble tea.

We end the evening at the Robot Restaurant - it's a mad futuristic mix of kabuki theatre, Japanese anime, Liberace sequins and retro Vegas decor - the best fun I've had out in ages.

After a few days in the city, it's time to seek some spiritual salvation, so we take a bullet train to Osaka, and connect to another train to Tanabe city in the Kii peninsula, to start our Kumano Kodo hike.

Our five-day, 25-mile (40km) trek

WELCOMING: many westerners find Japan impenetrable, but it is a remarkable place follows one of the most popular routes, starting at Takijiri-oji (just a short drive from Tanabe) and ending at the waterfall shrine in Kumano Nachi Taisha.

While much of the Kumano Kodo is accessible by car or bus, our goal is to take in as much as possible by hiking, while sleeping in traditional ryokan (Japanese inns) and minshuku (family-run guesthouses).

We hike along dappled paths by day and at night, exhausted, are treated to eight-course kaiseki dinners by our kind hosts-cum-chefs, gorging on a splendid mix of freshly prepared sushi, locally grown vegetables and home-made soba noodles.

These days, it's mostly foreigners who engage in the longer treks that can take anywhere from four to 14 days, depending on the route, ambition and amount of time one has.

The Japanese prefer weekends or day-long hikes, simply because of their long working hours, says Tanabe city's Kumano tourism manager Brad Towle.

"The Japanese consider these shrines 'power spots' where they can recharge with good energy," he says, as we begin our steep hike up into the mountains, a cushion of cypress leaves at our feet.

The final leg of our journey is an ancient one, as we travel like pilgrims

KATE Hodal was a guest of Inside Japan Tours (www.inside-japantours.com).

Their 14-night Pilgrims Paths self-guided tour costs from £1,860pp including accommodation, most transport, a number of evening meals, airport transfers, private guiding for one day in Tokyo, Kyoto, Mt. Koya and on the Kumano Kodo.

on a traditional boat along the turquoise Kumano river. When we arrive at the spectacular Kumano Nachi Taisha shrine, set against a 133m-long waterfall cascading over a huge granite and cypress outcrop, hundreds of locals have gathered to pray to the "mother goddess", asking for help trying to conceive or to bless newly pregnant women.

As I take in the scene around me, one of the Shinto priests comes over to offer prayer 'tips'. "You must pray with your full name and address so that the goddess can find you and deliver your wish," she tells me with a knowing smile.

So, despite the raised eyebrows from my partner, I do what the locals do: I throw a gold coin into the box, ring the big bell, bow twice, clap twice, tell the goddess my prayer (along with my address, quietly wondering if she delivers internationally), and bow again. Our trekking friend Shizu makes a separate prayer for me and claps delightedly with hope.

Let's just say the Japanese have their rules for a reason: if you follow instructions, sometimes you're lucky enough to get what you're looking for or praying for.

Paddington
(PG, 95 mins) Family/Adventure/Comedy

MORE than 50 years after he first appeared in print, author Michael Bond's beloved bear Paddington has finally arrived on the big screen in his first star-packed family adventure. Director Paul King's film lovingly weaves the traditional tenets of the duffel-coat wearing bear's story into a modern narrative.

In their youth, Lucy and Pastuzo were visited by a kindly English explorer who left his red hat with his furry friends.

When their home is threatened, Aunt Lucy packs her nephew off to the safety of London to track down the explorer, who has promised that there will always be a home for them in the capital.

As comforting and sweet as Paddington's beloved marmalade, this adaptation has heaps of heart and enough humour and carefully plotted cameos to ensure everyone more than grins and bears his adaptation.

Horrible Bosses 2
(15, 59 mins) Comedy/Romance

RELEASED in 2011, Horrible Bosses centred on three friends, who plotted to kill their sadistic employers and found self-respect in the process.

Sean Anders' raunchy sequel flings that self-respect out of the window and subjects the same unfortunate characters to a barrage of potty-mouthed humiliations that might be tolerable if we could muster an iota of sympathy for anyone in this redundant and joyless mess.

Alas, the lumbering script, scrawled by Anders and John Morris, has its mind in the gutter. Horrible Bosses 2 doesn't work on any level, with the different performance styles between the actors jarring. The filmmakers threw millions at this film and have created a poor excuse for a comedy.

THERE's no better time to plant trees and conifers, particularly bare-root ones, when the plants are dormant but the soil is still warm enough for the roots to become established before spring.

So if you're planting a tree during National Tree Week, which runs from November 29 to December 7, consider firstly your situation and how much space you have.

Trees can create privacy, shade, dramatic impact, colour and fruit, as well as movement and architectural form.

The height and structure of the types you choose are as important in a small garden as they are in a large one.

If you have a small space, consider choosing a narrow tree with minimal spread, which will provide height and structure.

Alternatively, you may prefer one landmark spreading tree with a canopy which casts dappled shade but allows for some planting underneath. Compact 'weeping' trees, such as a weeping pear (Pyrus salicifolia) could be used as a focal point.

If your space is really limited, you could plant a carefully trimmed tree in a large pot.

Excellent trees for small gardens include Amelanchier lamarckii, whose graceful branches carry copper-hued new leaves in spring along with starry, white flowers. In autumn the leaves often colour brilliantly too.

If you have room for two trees, try

TREES: Now is a good time to start thinking about what to plant for the year ahead.

Leafing through winter's tree choices to combine two trees which have a different season of interest.

A good example of this is a photinia - an evergreen with new red growth in late spring - and sorbus, which has lovely autumn hues and dazzling berries.

If you are looking for flowers, consider one of the crab apple varieties, such as Malus floribunda, the Japanese crab, which is adorned with blush pink and white fragrant flowers in spring and is slow growing.

You might also look at the Malus 'Royal Beauty', which bears deep red-purple flowers and small dark red fruits.

Among the most suitable flowering trees for a confined space is the Prunus 'Amanogawa'.

This is an upright specimen with ascending branches which produces fragrant pink flowers in mid-spring.

If you only have room for a pot, you could consider a Japanese maple.

This will produce fantastic foliage colour, or a trimmed bay, photinia or olive tree.

Bigger gardens offer more scope to house much larger trees.

Good examples are majestic oaks, horse chestnuts and lime trees. Just be aware of their impact on your views long-term because you don't want them to screen your vista of the countryside.

Don't go back to the Dark Ages

IT IS unbelievable that there are people who still wish to chase a helpless animal and see it torn to pieces for sport.

Yes, The Hunting Act 2004 is weak, with the then Labour Government who brought it in, appeasing the Countryside Alliance by permitting loopholes that cause suffering to the hunted animals, whilst attempting to meet the wishes of the majority of the public who wanted a ban on bloodsports.

Imagine if the laws that abolished slavery and child labour had been repealed, would we still have these abominations?

There were many people who were opposed to ending slavery and child labour. Similar arguments were put forward, such as jobs would be lost and the economy would suffer.

The loopholes of the Hunting Act 2004 need to be closed and the Act made more effective.

Hunting with hounds is not indicative of a civilised society and is as debasing to humans as it is cruel to our wildlife.

Therefore, to the majority, a repeal of the Hunting Act 2004 would be a giant step back to the Dark Ages.

Vivien Clifford,
Deal

Get focus off the fox hunting ban

OF ALL the things in the world to get het up over, surely the chasing of half a dozen foxes in the countryside should be pretty low down?

What about famine, terrorism, the economy, unemployment, the NHS - in fact pretty much everything else.

Yes, fox hunting is a cruel 'sport' but our Government should be focusing on the main issues not considering this one again.

Where's my cash back then KCC?

CAN readers please tell me where I can obtain a form to claim back money from the KCC?

Our road, has the lights switched off at 1am, as part of the cut-back trial being carried out by the KCC.

The thing is, I am still paying the same as friends in the next road, who have their lights on all night.

I am paying for the same service but the service is not delivered.

It's a bit like paying your bus fare to the terminus and then being told to get off two stops before.

LETTER OF THE WEEK

'Hero' campaigners fighting for kindness

IS THE hunting ban working? (KoS, last week). I doubt it.

However, I am far more concerned about live animal exports, vivisection, factory farming, conditions in slaughter houses and puppy farming, to name but a few.

The list is endless and it represents deliberately inflicted animal cruelty on a vast, terrible scale.

Money, as usual, features strongly. The root of all evil.

What can be done to put an end to all this misery? Sadly, there is no easy answer, but following one's conscience is a good starting point. All contributions gratefully received.

The wonderful people who work tirelessly to stop live exports are a prime example to all of us. Unsung heroes in their own right.

In the final analysis, patience will be rewarded. It has to be.

Christmas is approaching at speed. Animals play an important part in the birth of the holy babe, illustrating gentleness, simplicity and peace. The message is loud and clear, but it falls on deaf ears much of the time.

If mankind will not show compassion in this direction, then it is a poor lookout for the human species.

I am standing by for the flak.

Let's tackle the language barrier

AT LAST, a letter (albeit the last and brief one) from H E Bassett of New Romney (KoS, last week), asking why there doesn't appear to be a 'th' in the Kent dialect.

My response to that is, it is not dialect, but the result of slovenly speech.

The way many speak our language now is atrocious.

Indeed, 'nothing' pronounced as 'nuffing' is nothing compared to the prevalence of the words 'you know', with which numerous people these days litter their conversations; and if we didn't have the word 'like' in the English language, a countless number of people would be incapable of having any intercourse at all.

I 'was like' this. I 'was like' that. When I hear it, (all too often these days) out of politeness, I restrain myself from asking if they actually had the experience they're describing, or something similar.

Another mistake, frequently heard, is the use of the word 'was', instead of 'were'. "I heard you singing. I thought you 'was' great".

It grates on me every time I hear the Manfred Mann song that includes the line, "I knew we 'was' falling in love". Perhaps there are some out there reading this, saying, "What's wrong with that?". Maybe it's just me who finds it irritating.

Another example is the now long-running advertisement on TV where the one of the big supermarket chains (that claims to be the cheapest) uses the word 'comparable' and pronounces it as 'com-parable'.

No matter if they are the cheapest, I will never purchase anything from a supermarket whose management is prepared to allow such a mispronunciation to be broadcast in its name. They should know that the correct pronunciation is: 'com-prabul'.

Perhaps they think the former gives them more 'street-cred', when in reality it perpetuates ignorance of the correct way to pronounce the word.

Such slovenly speech is now also very common with the written word: 'Your', instead of 'you're'. Or use of the word 'of', instead of 've', as the abbreviation of the word 'have'.

The list of such is increasing with every passing day.

Of course language is a dynamic thing, changing all the time, but there are some basic rules that never change and they should be taught to children by the way we converse with them and as they learn through formal education.

Sadly, there are now so many adults who speak in a slovenly manner, it seems firmly entrenched into everyday life, so I cannot see it doing anything but getting continually worse.

Churchill would not like the EU

YOUR correspondent, David Boston, in his letter, 'Let us not forget power of unity', is surely not suggesting that Winston Churchill would have approved of Britain being a member of the European Union?

When the idea of a Common Market came about, Churchill stated, 'We should be linked to Europe; not absorbed'.

It would have been utterly abhorrent to him that we would become so absorbed in Europe that we would forfeit our sovereignty.

I am not a one party person. I have voted for all three of the major parties in turn.

But objectively it is clear to me that if I want the opportunity to vote on an 'In-Out' referendum on Europe I have only one choice, and that is to vote for the party which Winston led.

What other choice have I?

It is the only party that has a realistic chance of being elected with that vote in its manifesto.

Looking forward to the white stuff?

IS anyone else dreading the arrival of the white stuff and its far-reaching effects on all our lives?

Vauxhall shaping up for another crack at the top

IS VAUXHALL a mainstream premium brand? Well, it hasn't achieved the latter state yet and the marque's griffin or wyvern badge is not yet coveted like that of BMW or Audi, but there are definite signs of a move upmarket.

As with rivals like Ford and Peugeot, the General Motors brand wants to rise above the price and volume pressures of the low to mid market before it is swamped by yet more cheap and cheerful imports, notably from China.

That's not easy when your traditional business is founded on pile 'em high, sell 'em cheap fleet or company car business; commonplace models don't tend to attract a premium reputation.

But Vauxhall's upmarket ambition is working, backed by better looking cars and classier, well-equipped cabins; secondhand values are climbing, led by the Mokka crossover/SUV, quirky Adam city car, and stylish Insignia and Astra family models.

This feel good factor has been helped by the Corsa - old and new. As final stocks of the current car were sold off, demand remained strong and the new model should make the handover seamless, especially as Vauxhall has opted for an evolution rather than revolution approach to the new generation car. This tactic is not always exciting, but when you seem to have a winning combination - backed by a consistent top five position in the UK sales charts - you can be forgiven for adopting the old adage 'don't fix it, if it ain't broke'.

So the new Corsa looks reminiscent of the old car and delivers everything it offered, only better.

It also has an all-new engine option worth shouting about: the new three-cylinder turbo petrol unit is a revelation, offering four-cylinder smoothness and response without the weight or fuel consumption.

Juke still a hit with its 'Marmite' shape

You either love it or hate it, but there's no denying the Nissan's 'baby crossover', the Juke is still flying out of the showrooms...and now it's been given a freshen up

No car polarises opinion more than the Nissan Juke, but there is no doubting its success for the brand and the UK - it is produced at Nissan's busy Sunderland plant and has been a major motor export.

It was designed as a junior partner to the hugely popular Qashqai, launched in 2007 and credited with creating the crossover sector - part people carrier, part SUV and part family hatch.

But when the Juke arrived in 2010, it was clear that success had gone to the heads of Nissan's designers: the car looked like a bulldog and the raked roof line ate into rear headroom.

But a flood of buyers loved it for all that, plus its high driving position and choice of front-wheel drive and 4x4.

Nissan even launched a hot version, the Nismo, in 2012 to bring a halo to the line-up with its turbocharged 197bhp 1.6-litre engine.

And Nissan has now given a midlife facelift to its 'enfant terrible' to make it even funkier. New lights front and back add to the pugnacious stance, while a sportier cabin addresses comments that the interior never quite matched the impact of

'BULLDOG': Some call it aggressive, others call it sweet...Nissan is coining it in as the British-built Juke builds on the success of its big brother the Qashqai in terms of its popularity with car buyers the exterior.

With one eye on the success of those retro rivals, the MINI and Fiat 500, Nissan has also given free reign to customisation, with some particularly sharp looking alloys in the mix.

Priced from a competitive £13,420, the level of standard kit is generous anyway: the line-up opens with the 93bhp non-turbo 1.6-litre petrol Visia model, and this comes with 16-inch alloys, air con, all electric windows, tyre pressure monitoring and daytime running lights.

On a practical note, Nissan has extracted a much-needed 40 per cent increase in luggage capacity on front-wheel drive only versions; just as well, because the major failing of the design is the modest cabin size, but at least it is a better load lugger this time round.

interesting new powertrain option; it's lively yet economical if you don't abuse the boost, and costs £1,400 less than the equivalent diesel.

But we tested what is still widely regarded as the best choice: the 110PS (108bhp) 1.5-litre diesel version, which is smooth, lively and economical - 70.6mpg on the official combined cycle. With low emissions of 104g/km of CO₂, it will also cost you just £20/year in road tax after a freebie first year, but check out that DIG-T equivalent if you don't cover many miles, as you'll never get the diesel's extra outlay back in fuel savings.

Whatever your miles though, you will enjoy the Juke's point-and-shoot handling, even if its high body does make it lean a bit during hard cornering.

Motability

Buyer's guide

Motability's liberating influence

Scheme helps fund and adapt a vehicle for the use of those with disabilities

MOTABILITY has radically changed the way disabled people and their families live their lives.

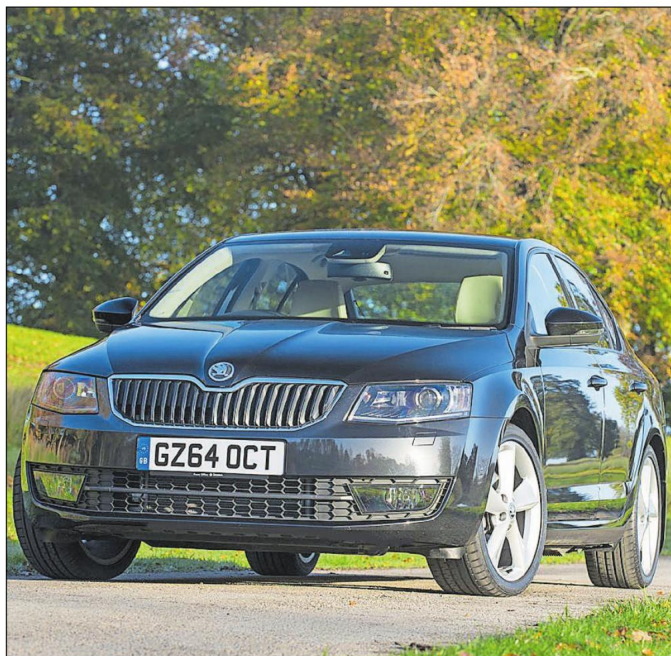

The Government-backed scheme enables them to get on the road for much less than it would cost them to buy or lease a new, or nearly new, car privately and helps them with potentially costly adaptations for controls or wheelchair access.

On top of that, the scheme's regular payments can take care of everyday running costs, from insurance, maintenance and repairs, to breakdown assistance – a huge reassurance when the cost of motoring is soaring.

What is more, Motability does not insist that the disabled person is the driver; the car is made available for the benefit of that person, which means that up to two other named drivers can be on the car's insurance cover instead of the disabled person.

■ For more about this liberating scheme for disabled people, see inside this special supplement.

Evolution of a scheme adopted by millions

How Motability allowed users and their drivers to choose the right car for them

TRANSPORT aid for the disabled used to be limited strictly to those who could drive themselves.

And this was usually in the form of a notoriously unstable three-wheeler with room for the driver only - not much use for families - and a tendency to tip over on corners or in high winds.

That changed with the launch of the Government-backed Motability charity in 1978, which calculated an allowance that disabled people could use towards a vehicle of their choice.

It removed the stigma of the blue 'Invacar' - finally outlawed from UK roads in 2003 - and also opened up transport to disabled people who couldn't drive themselves.

Since then, more than three million cars, scooters and powered wheelchairs have been sourced through Motability, allowing disabled people to go shopping, do voluntary work, visit friends, go to the doctor, do sport, give a family member a lift, or go on holiday - all things the motoring majority takes for granted.

Some users have even been able to take up further education or pursue better jobs and careers, having been liberated by their new mobility. The scheme was modified recently though, to streamline procedures and prevent misuse creeping into the system (see box on the right for details).

SPACE OR PACE: Invacar users would have been amazed that they could have cars like the capacious yet compact Fiat Qubo (bottom right), upmarket Volvo V40 (above) or sporty Alfa Romeo Giulietta (top right).

The key changes were:

- Streamlining the list of cars available.
- Nominated drivers must live at or within five miles of the applicant's address, though special circumstances will be considered.

So who can drive a Motability car?

Scheme includes many special adaptations to help disabled with steering, seating, safety and stowage

Motability is a worry-free package that includes:

- A choice of around 2,000 car models.
- Insurance, servicing and maintenance.
- RAC breakdown assistance
- Road tax.
- Tyre and windscreen replacement.
- 60,000 mileage allowance over 3 years.

UP to two nominated drivers can drive a Motability vehicle, but the disabled person qualifying for the scheme does not have to be one of them.

The drivers may be friends or relatives, and parents or carers can apply on behalf of a child aged three or older. The car only has to be used for the benefit of the disabled person, such as a shopping trip or collecting a prescription – they don't even have to be in the car. A third insured driver can be added for a small payment.

If you receive the Higher Rate Mobility Component of the Disability Living Allowance or the War Pensioners' Mobility Supplement, you can apply for a Motability lease by exchanging part or all of that allowance.

Car dimensions vary: seat height, door opening angle and storage space for wheelchairs and equipment can all affect whether the car works for you and your particular disability or not, but your local dealer can take you through a questionnaire designed to ensure the car and Motability is right for you.

Many special adaptations are available free to help with speed and steering, signalling and safety, stowage, and seating and access.

The Motability package continues to the end of your three-year lease, with a seamless transfer to your new car. Around 600,000 customers currently choose Motability and 97 per cent say they would recommend the scheme to their friends.

Don't worry there's help to find right one

MOTABILITY'S range of more than 2,000 vehicles can seem daunting.

The scheme's website has a search function allowing users to quickly create a short list of comparable cars, taking account of buying parameters, mixing typical consumer searches and the specialist needs of Motability users.

Search by car details takes a consumer-style approach and includes:

- What kind of mobility allowance the user has.
- What level of advance payment the user intends to pay, if anything.
- Preferred car type, make, model and number of doors.
- Whether the user wants a manual, semi-automatic or automatic gearbox.
- Whether the driver is under-25.

But there are two other search programmes:

■ Search by Accessibility Needs, taking account of car measurements.

■ Search for a Wheelchair Accessible Vehicle (WAV).

There is also excellent advice on what type of car to look for, in language more relevant to disabled users, such as:

- How smaller two-to-three door cars generally have wider doors with larger opening angles that may make access easier, but may be both harder to close generally and harder to open wide in narrow parking spaces.
- How hatchbacks have a raise-up rear door or 'hatch', which could make it harder for a wheelchair user to open/close or access items, or simply be problematic when opening in the garage.
- Extra space in estate cars can be more convenient for a disabled person as the load area may be used to carry disability aids, but the vehicles can be longer and bulkier.

Top tips on making your Motability choice

SMALL CARS:

Tend to have lower advance payments, running costs and CO2 emissions than larger vehicles. Two-to-three door cars generally have wider doors with larger opening angles, which makes access easier, but closing the door and fitting in narrow parking spaces may be harder. Four-to-five door cars benefit from superior back seat access – useful if you often have more than one passenger.

MEDIUM CARS:

Are often sold as hatchbacks and will have a slightly bigger boot than a standard small car. The same doors argument applies as for small cars.

FAMILY CARS:

Family cars are large four-door saloons or five-door hatchbacks and are considerably larger than medium sized cars. Hatchbacks usually have more boot capacity.

ESTATE CARS:

Usually longer than a standard saloon or hatchback, with useful space for mobility aids in the boot, but this can add to the car's bulk so make sure you check it out with a test drive before committing.

MULTI-PURPOSE VEHICLES (MPV):

Ranging from small to large, MPVs can seat up to nine people.

The seats are higher, with more headroom, legroom and width. Some have large sliding side doors, which obviously improve access for those with disabilities.

4X4 AND SPORT UTILITY VEHICLES (SUV):

The term '4x4' is usually used to describe vehicles designed for off-road use, which generally have higher ground clearance.

Until recently, all 4x4s had four-wheel drive, but many people now buy for the SUV styling and opt for a front-wheel drive only version to save fuel.

COUPES, ROADSTERS AND CABRIOLETS:

Coupes are small and sporty-looking, seating either two or four people, but may be compromised for disabled users due to their two-door format, low down and cramped seating and smaller boots.

WHEELCHAIR ACCESSIBLE VEHICLES (WAVs):

WAVs are cars converted to carry passengers travelling in their wheelchair or those who wish to drive from a wheelchair. WAVs may be best if you have trouble getting in and out of the car from your wheelchair and would prefer to remain in it when travelling as a passenger.

WAVs come in different sizes and have many standard features. The Motability website has a specific WAV Search.

DIFFERENT APPROACHES: Honda's Civic Tourer (top) is a capacious yet stylish estate, while the Renault Scenic (above) is a smart yet practical MPV

Stones ready for second round tie

Maidstone United's players up for Wrexham Dragons clash

Football

By Jamie Weir

jamie.weir@archant.co.uk

MAIDSTONE United are set to clash with Wrexham Dragons in the FA Cup second round next Saturday (December 6).

The Ryman Football League team earned the tie after striker Fannie Collin slotted away a brace of goals in Maidstone's 2-0 giant-killing of Stevenage.

And the Stones will be looking to repeat their last David vs Goliath performance, with the Dragons two tiers above Maidstone in the league pyramid.

Despite this, the Stones will be going in to the match full of confidence after their win against Stevenage, and more recently their 6-0 demolition of Herne Bay.

That performance saw them move into the third round of the League Cup.

Wrexham, meanwhile, have lost two of their last three games, setting the Dragons up for a potential fall when the two teams meet.

And one thing which has bolstered the Stones this week is Jay May's successful appeal against his three game ban.

May was given the ban after being sent off for allegedly elbowing during the Stones FA Trophy defeat by Sudbury on November 15.

But the FA upheld the striker's appeal with the regulatory commission ruling to overturn the match ban.

That frees May to play in the VCD Athletic, Wrexham and Leatherhead games.

Stones boss Jay Saunders was relieved to find out that May would be allowed to play.

He said: "Obviously it's a massive bonus for us finding out we'll have Jay May available to play."

The second round draw will, like the game against Stevenage, be played in front of the cameras. The match will be televised live on BBC Wales. Kick off will be at 5.30pm.

Dover Athletic will also be continuing their FA Cup campaign next weekend.

The Whites will take on Cheltenham at the Whaddon Road stadium in their second round tie.

This year is the second Dover have reached the second round, with the team hopeful they can continue their journey in the competition.

The game will kick off at 2pm on Sunday, December 7.

"Hosting the opening game of the men's Ashes tour and our first ever Test Match as England play

Gillingham FC sees centre-back swap

GILLS manager Peter Taylor made a clean swap this week as centre-back Callum Davies left Priestfield on loan and 19-year-old Harry Lennon joined the club.

Taylor signed Lennon from Championship side, Charlton Athletic, on a youth loan. The Gills will keep the talented centre-back until January 3.

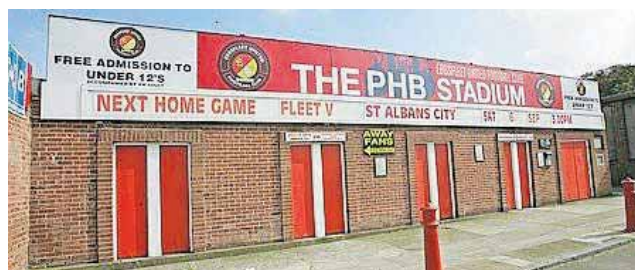

The Gills manager had to move quickly to replace Callum Davies after it was announced that he was joining Dover Athletic on loan until the new year, with Taylor signing the deal with Lennon in time for him to play at yesterday's home fixture against Port Vale.

Davies has experience of playing with the Whites, having helped them to gain promotion while on loan at the Crabble last season.

He returned to the Gills this summer, taking to the field eight times so far this season – twice captaining the team during Johnstone Paint Trophy games against Stevenage and Colchester.

TAYLOR: Worked fast to get new centre-back signing

EBBSFLEET: Manager Steve Brown was sacked after a bruising 3-0 defeat

Week of high drama for Ebbsfleet United

IT has been a week of high drama for Ebbsfleet United with the club seeing the departure of manager Steve Brown, before a new caretaker manager was installed.

The news of Brown's sacking came after the team's battering in a 3-0 loss at home against Gosport.

Brown first joined the club in June 2013, taking over from Liam Daish, but he lasted just 18 months, with the Fleet's chairman Dr Abdullah Al-Humaidi saying that the team needed a 'change of direction'.

Ebbsfleet, who currently sit fourth in the Vanarama Conference South, then announced that skipper Daryl McMahon would take over as a caretaker manager for the immediate future.

McMahon is currently Fleet's youth academy manager. The club has announced that it is keen to keep moving forward as smoothly as possible. Its board of directors have stated that they are currently considering all options for the vacant managerial position.

Kent mourns Aussie batsman

THE world of cricket was shaken this week, with the tragic death of Australian Test batsman Phil Hughes.

Kent cricket club joined the mourning for the 25-year-old who died when he was struck by a bouncer during a domestic match.

The cricketer never regained consciousness after being hit, tragically passing away on Thursday morning.

Club CEO Jamie Clifford said: "We are greatly saddened by the tragic news of Phil Hughes' death. All our thoughts are with Phil's family.

"Kent County Cricket Club sends deep condolences to Phil Hughes' family, friends and teammates."
